Norris Urges Roosevelt To Remain in 1940 Race

Fears Liberal Split If the President Eliminates Self at 'This Critical Time'

By William V. Nessly
Post Staff Writer

Senator Norris (Independent), of Nebraska, last night urged President Roosevelt not to eliminate himself from the 1940 Presidential nomination situation, lest there result a split in the ranks of liberals and the nomination of a "reactionary."

Taking cognizance of reports that Mr. Roosevelt does not desire to run for a third term and "clamor" that he announce his intentions, the Senator, advocate of a third term, declared in a statement there is no other political figure "under whose banner there can be such unanimity of honest, progressive, patriotic citizens."

Question of U. S. Welfare

Norris issued a statement saying:

"There has been a recent clamor on the part of some people that President Roosevelt should at this time announce to the country whether or not he will be a candidate for re-election.

"With very few exceptions this demand comes from politicians who are not only enemies of President Roosevelt but who are likewise opposed to the progressive policies for which he stands. . . .

"At this critical time, Mr. Roosevelt should not eliminate himself from the contest. It is a question much greater and broader than his personal wishes. . . .

"No man can tell what may happen in the next several months, but until the clouds of doubt and obscurity are cleared away, he should remain in a position where, if the patriotic spirit of the country demands it, he can still be the leader of the liberal, progressive thought of the nation.

"The welfare of our common country is far more important than the wishes or ambitions of any man or group of men."

Follows Story in The Post

Norris' statement followed closely an article in yesterday's Post, by Robert C. Albright, saying in effect that Mr. Roosevelt is not seeking a third term and is expected within a reasonable time to disavow publicly any personal aspirations for re-election.

The Nebraskan conceded that "no doubt the President does not want to be a candidate for re-election" and that "he has earned a rest," but insisted that "while the battle is still on, he cannot surrender his leadership against the wishes and hopes of millions of progressive citizens in both political parties who look upon him as the only man who can lead them to victory."

'No Other Leader'

"If he were eliminated from the scene at the present time," Norris said, "there is no other leader who can unite the progressive people of America in a fight against a united, reactionary enemy. The danger is that the progressive element would be divided into groups which would go down to defeat in a convention where the united opposition might succeed in nominating a reactionary, or, at least, a candidate who was progressive only in spots."

Indications that an issue of the 1940 campaign will center on President Roosevelt's recognition of the

Fans Riot as Giants Defeat Redskins, 9-7

New York, Dec. 3.—Get this picture, please, and you'll have the wildest sequence of events in New York's football history—a riot-filled denouement at the Polo Grounds where Washington's Redskins today lost the Eastern Football Championship to the Giants, 9-7.

Picture the Giants leading by 2 points as the hands of the stadium clock snip off the remaining 45 seconds of play. Don't forget that there are 62,404 fans jam-packed into the stands and now in a frenzy. Among those fans are 15,000 Washingtonians now strong on the scent of a last-minute Redskin victory. And realize, too, that 5 minutes before, the Redskins scored a touchdown to whittle down the Giants' 9-0 lead.

The Redskins are now pounding goalward again. They have the ball on the Giants' 7-yard line. It is second down and the seconds are too precious to use up with running plays. Into the game goes Tackle Bo Russell, Redskin field-goal kicking specialist. Into place-kick formation go the Redskins, with Frank Filchock kneeling to hold the ball on the 15-yard line.

Wait in a Dead Silence

Russell tosses away his head gear. You understand that a three-point kick would win the game for the Redskins. Magically the loud frenzy of the fans gives way to a dead hush. The ball is snapped, and Russell swings his foot into it.

Was it good?

Referee Bill Halloran signals that it is not. He says it is wide to the right of the posts. Onto the field rushes Coach Ray Flaherty of the Redskins to protest. As the jubilant Giants hop about in glee, Redskin players charge at the referee demanding he reverse his decision. He does not.

Three plays later the game ends. Referee Halloran starts to make his way from the field. Fist fights break out throught the grandstands, between Washington and New York fans. A group of fans evades sideline police, rushes on the field toward the officials.

Flaherty Protests

On the field, too, is Coach Flaherty, upbraiding the officials. Out of a knot of Redskin players and fans gathered in midfield, Referee Halloran breaks on the double quick for the dressing room. Ushers form to give him escort but Redskin Halfback Ed Justice breaks through the blockade. Fists begin to fly and Halloran leaps into the stands.

8,000 Fans Jam Station, Cheer Redskins

'We Wuz Robbed,' Crowd Chants in Ovation to Heroes

"The largest crowd since the troops returned from France," according to the stationmaster's estimate, packed Union Station last night to roar a conquering-hero welcome to Washington's defeated Redskins.

Waiting until nearly midnight for the arrival of the Redskins' special train from New York, the throng estimated at 8,000 fans chanted a chorus of "We wuz robbed."

They were referring, of course, to the referee's decision which labeled Bo Russell's attempted place-kick as a miss in the last minute of play, the Giants winning, 9-7.

The thousands who pressed ten deep against the gates to the train-shed grew steadily soon after 9

British Raid German Base At Helgoland

Direct Hits Scored On Warships, London Says; Berlin Denies Any Were Damaged

By the Associated Press

London, Dec. 3.—A "strong formation" of British bombers made "direct hits" on German warships, including a cruiser, in a raid near the base of Helgoland, the British asserted today.

The air ministry announced the raid. An unofficial announcement said among the ships hit was a German cruiser.

The cruiser and another cruiser were lying close to a flotilla of six or seven destroyers when the big British bombers swooped on them, the unofficial report said.

(The official German news agency said in Berlin that an attack of British bombers on Helgoland had been driven off.)

Plane Sinks U-Boat

The air ministry also announced that a British plane patrolling over the North Sea "attacked and destroyed with bombs an enemy submarine surprised on the surface."

A communique said the patrol plane sank the submarine with a single bomb.

"There were no survivors," the account said.

"The pilot climbed into a cloud-bank and stalked his quarry from there. When the U-boat crew heard the engines of the aircraft, they made frantic attempts to close the conning tower hatch and crash-dive, but it was too late.

"A direct hit was scored. Parts of the submarine and other wreckage were thrown high by the explosion and the surface of the sea became coated with oil over a large area. The aircraft remained over this position for five minutes to look for survivors but none was seen."

Raiders Return Safely

All planes engaged in the Helgoland foray returned to their bases, the communique declared, despite heavy anti-aircraft fire from German guns. One Messerschmidt plane, "the only enemy fighter encountered," was said to have been shot down.

Heavy bombs were said to have been used in the raid. The number

Soviet Defends War As Move to Curb 'Influences Hostile To the U. S. S. R.'

By Witt Hancock
Associated Press Staff Writer

Moscow, Dec. 3.—The Soviet Press today defended the Russian invasion of Finland as necessary to remove the small northern nation from "influences hostile to the U. S. S. R."

[The fourth Soviet war communique since the invasion of Finland, issued late last night, told of the "continued advance" of Red army forces on all fronts and announced the capture of four strategic islands in the eastern end of the Gulf of Finland, the United Press reported.

[The islands—Hogland, Tytarsaari, Lavansaari and Seiskari—were among those originally demanded by Russia to bolster the defenses of Leningrad and the Kronstadt naval base.

[The communique said that Finnish defenders were retreating in the far north and that Russian troops, building roads as they went, were advancing in eastern Finland.

Air Force Inactive

["Due to unfavorable weather there were no aerial engagements," the communique said.

[Unofficial dispatches from the frontier earlier indicated that stubborn resistance by the Finns and a blinding snowstorm had combined to slow the Russian invasion.]

[The Soviet Baltic fleet was said to have shelled Finland's coast again during the day.

[The Stockholm newspaper Aftonbladet reported a large-scale attack is expected to be unleashed against Finland by Soviet troops, warships and planes immediately. Soviet warships were reported massing between Estonia and Finland.

[The Moscow radio today announced the capture of Terijoki, 12 miles across the frontier, although the Red Army high command had announced it Friday.—Editor's Note.]

Italy to Fight Any Russian Bid for Power in Balkans

Rome Keeps Vigilant Watch Over Developments; Paper Reports Russo-Nazi Agreement to Divide Rumania

Copyright by New York Times.

Rome, Dec. 3.—Circles close to the government made clear today that any Russian attempt to upset the status quo in the Balkans will be opposed by Italy with every means.

Whether this hostility will materialize in an open conflict or whether Italy will adopt a policy similar to that of the Spanish civil war depends on Russia's attitude and methods.

According to some, one thing is certain—Italy is determined to prevent the Balkan states from being swallowed up by the Soviet in the manner of the Baltic states, and may not be expected to remain passive while communism carves an outlet on the Mediterranean.

Reports concerning Soviet diplomatic and propaganda activity in the Balkans have been reaching Rome for some time, and Italians, impressed by the rapidity with which Russia has been stretching over northern Europe, are increasingly vigilant in the Balkans and ready to intervene at the least sign of danger.

The Italians' sympathies for Finland were so outspoken today they imply a direct warning to Moscow not to adopt similar methods elsewhere.

In today's editorial, the Resto del Carlino points out that the Balkan countries are outside the reach of the Russian appetite " not because of the ridiculous democratic 'guarantees' (by Britain to Greece and Rumania), but because of Italy's clear-sighted policy—vigilant, ready and determined.

The Turin La Stampa reported from Bern that Germany and Russia already have agreed to divide Rumania.

La Stampa said Germany's passive stand in the Finnish crisis can be interpreted only as an indication the Nazis have decided to secure adequate compensation in other sec-

London, Dec. 3.—Russia's attack on Finland, it was learned on unimpeachable authority tonight, was part of a detailed plan, which Germany last August agreed to in order to smash the Anglo-French negotiations with Russia and bring the Soviet government into the Nazi camp.

Russia, it was disclosed made the same proposition to Great Britain and France last summer—that she should be given a free hand in the Baltic with the right to establish military bases in Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania and in Finland and on the Aaland Islands at the mouth of the Bothnia.

In return, it was said, Premier Molotoff told British Ambassador Seeds Russia would be willing to enter into a pact of mutual assistance with Great Britain and France.

Nazis Accused

The Anglo-French reply to this suggestion was that they could not traffic with the sovereignty of other independent states; that they could not barter the independence of Finland, Estonia, Lithuania and Latvia for the cooperation of Russia in a peace front.

Nothing has been stated publicly by the British Foreign Office on the reasons why the Anglo-French-Russian negotiations collapsed and precipitated the war, but it can now be stated that this is the reason.

Because Germany did traffic with the indipendence of these small states, according to the British, that much of the responsibility for the fate of Finland must belong to the Nazis.

For over four months Britain and France attempted to reach an agreement with Russia. Russia first sug-

Finns Agree Not to Bomb Open Cities

Promise to Roosevelt Conditional on Soviet Observing Rule

Finland last night notified President Roosevelt that it would refrain from bombing civilian populations and unfortified cities from the air as the American President has asked, if Russia will observe the same rule of conduct.

No formal reply has been received from the Soviet Union to Mr. Roosevelt's appeal to both combatants, dated last Thursday, though Premier Molotoff was reported to have told the American Ambassador to Moscow that the appeal was "pointless," since Russia had no such intentions.

The Finnish reply, delivered to the State Department through the American Minister to Finland, H. F. Arthur Schoenfeld, said:

"The government of Finland, approving the principle of international law announced by the President of the United States of America, affirms its determination that its armed forces shall in no event, and under no circumstances, undertake the bombardment from the air of civilian populations or of unfortified cities,

Help From King Winter

Helsinki (Monday), Dec. 4.—Although Finnish troops continue to hold in check the invading Red army, the Finnish government late last night made an attempt to reopen negotiations with the Soviets through the Swedish Legation in Moscow.

It was emphasized, however, that the "inquiry of whether the Soviet government was prepared to open negotiations for a peaceful settlement" was made only on condition that peace could be achieved "without violating the independence or vital interes[illegible] Finland."

No reply h[illegible] been received from Moscow[illegible] announced, but there was [illegible] optimism that a favorable answer could be expected. The Soviet government has sponsored a rebel "Finnish People's government"—headed by a former Finnish Communist for 20 years resident in Moscow—and has announced that it refuses to deal in any way with what it calls "madmen" of the Risto Ryti government in Helsinski.

Raids on Capital Halt

As reports from the battle fronts told of successes for Finland's little army against the invading Russians, the evacuation of Helsinski and other cities continued, although there were no air attacks on the capital yesterday. Only one-sixth of Helsinski's population of almost 300,000 remained in the city.

Eleven Soviet planes were reported shot down in flames by Finnish antiaircraft fire and combat planes when the Soviets attempted to bomb the big power station at Imatra just northwest of the embattled Karelian Peninsula. A twelfth was forced to land and its crew captured.

A whole company of Russia's parachute troops was surrounded, disarmed and taken prisoner by Finnish troops after landing, with machine guns and automatic rifles, at Vilmannstrand, 42 miles northwest of the southeastern port of Viborg.

Crash Through Ice

A force of 1,000 Russian troops was reported to have been wiped out in the Karelian town of Terijoki—site of the Soviet-sponsored Finnish "peoples' government"—by land mines left behind when the Finnish army abandoned the town Saturday.

On the eastern frontier, north of Lake Ladoga, the Russians were said in Finland's war bulletin No. 3 to have suffered "heavy losses" when they tried to advance over the frozen lakes dotting the area.

The Russians, plainly silhouetted on the ice, were said to have been picked off by expert marksmen.

Finnish authorities said the invaders lost many men when they crashed through thin ice on the lakes.

Finnish advices claimed four Soviet infantry companies were "de-

The Neediest Families:

$150 Will Keep Eight Till Father Can Earn

By Lucia Giddens,
Post Staff Writer

When a father and mother have watched their six children grow thinner from lack of food, the words "Christmas cheer" sound like an echo from a half-forgotten past.

Only the generosity of their fellow citizens stands between the "M" family and the bleak future which stretches out before them—unless help is given right now, when it is needed most.

The Post's Christmas Fund for the 50 neediest families opens to generous citizens an opportunity to relieve actual suffering and to do even more—to help put a family back on the road to independence. This is a Christmas gift not for a season but for years to come.

Help Will Save These Families From Drifting to Greater Misery

These families have been investigated and selected by five family agencies, members of the Council of Social Agencies. They are not eligible for public relief and private agencies' funds are too limited to meet the needs of all who apply. With a long waiting list at the WPA, these families cannot look there for a solution of their troubles.

Although the families are in great emergencies, every one of them needs and wants only a temporary "lift" until they can carry their own load.

They have never been "charity cases." They have made their own way until now—when difficulties too great for them to handle have overwhelmed them. Help now will save the families from drifting into greater misery and want and will restore to them a chance to support themselves.

The first of the families was described yesterday, and glimpses are given today into the homes of the "M" and "D" families.

Read the stories and imagine what your help can do at such a crucial time in their lives.

Make out your check to The Washington Post, Neediest Family No. ——, and mail it promptly, so one family can be that much nearer the end of its despair. Other contributions may be dropped into a box on the counter just inside the entrance of The Post.

The agencies which have investigated the cases and will administer the help without cost are: Family Service Association, which is nonsectarian; Catholic Charities, which helps

Red-Haired Susie, Ape at Zoo, Escapes Cage, Battles Keepers

While terrified spectators scrambled for safety, three keepers at the Zoo yesterday battled 30 minutes with "Susie," red-haired orangutan, who escaped from her cage at the height of the Sunday rush.

The ape, eight years old and weighing more than 135 pounds, gained temporary freedom by tearing loose a heavy steel bar, believed to have been improperly welded. Apparently perplexed by unexpected liberty, she roamed aimlessly between the cage and the railing separating it from onlookers.

Her keeper, Charles E. Kern, at once telephoned Head Keeper William H. Blackburn and entered the enclosure, believing "Susie" would recognize him since he feeds her daily. Instead, she started tearing insulation from steampipes in the enclosure.

Blackburn arrived with ropes and several keepers and was immediately attacked by the infuriated ape. Kern dragged her from his back and by talking to her got Susie calmed. Another keeper tossed peanuts into an empty cage and Susie entered.

Blackburn was uninjured. Kern and Samuel P. Morris, keeper of the antelope house, were scratched and bitten.

Winnie Judd Escapes Again; Trunk-Slayer Had 'Aid or Key'

By the Associated Press

Phoenix, Ariz., Dec. 3.—Winnie Ruth Judd, insane trunk murderess, escaped for the second time within six weeks tonight from the Arizona State Hospital.

Kel Fox, member of the Governor's secretarial staff, said he had reason to believe she had "outside help or had procured a pass key."

Fox said Mrs. Judd escaped about 7 p. m. from the back door of her ward—the same one at which she was captured October 30, six days after her revious escape.

At 6:30 p. m. nurses checked Mrs. Judd's ward. She was sitting on the edge of her bed, apparently in a nervous and distraught condition. When they returned half an hour later for their regular inspection, she had disappeared and the back door of the ward was open.

Mrs. Judd left the [illegible]ital tonight despite the pron[illegible] she had previously made to [illegible]ouis J. Saxe, superintendent, [illegible]s would not attempt to flee [illegible] if he[illegible] privileges were restored.

Her previous escape on October [illegible] added another lurid chapter to the spectacular career of the "Blonde Tigress," who in 1931 killed two women and expressed the grisly cargo in trunks to Los Angeles.

Over the Coffee

OF THEE I SING

Since the oversize "defense" program got noised about, the Capital is overrun with prehensile gentlemen eager to catch some of the golden rain in their big baskets.

Because Scotch highballs were served at his last reception, some of the conclusion-jumpers deem Henry Wallace still a 1940 candidate. Usually he—and his guests—are virtual teetotalers. It's likelier, of course, that the Wallaces merely conform with Washington custom to avoid being conspicuous.

Another tale which amuses officers at the War Department concerns a British aviator who had been sent out to drop thousands of leaflets over Germany, but who returned two hours early. His flight commander was astounded.

"Surely," he said, "you couldn't have circled around per orders and dropped all those leaflets so soon!"

"I saved time, sir," he said, "by dropping them over in bales."

"Gad!" exclaimed the commander. "You might have hurt someone!"

"—new camps with drill"

At the War Department plans are being contemplated for 1,000 new CCC camps of a different sort, where the boys would receive two hours military drill daily along with their work.

√ √ √ √

These camps would be apart from the regular CCC camps, where no military drill is authorized. Their enrollees would volunteer specifically for the drill camps, and get $8 monthly, like the others, but not the $22 monthly relief for their families.

Such new camps with drill will avoid the possible charge that only poor men's sons are being trained for war. At 1,000 camps some 200,000 boys could be trained every six months or so (and it might be a grand thing for their health if men in their thirties were eligible too).

Russia's invasion of Finland aroused more bitter indignation in the Capital than the attack on Poland. August officials are calling Stalin a so and so, not quite under their breath.

Some of the inner-circle New Dealers are hinting that President Roosevelt may have nothing whatever to say about his third-term intentions between now and June, 1940. Nothing conclusive, that is; maybe a quip or two.

New Capital wisecracks:

A Minnesota Congressman calls Hitler a "Germaniac."

Sneerers at the Townsend plan assert that the $200-a-month "senior citizens" should be called "senile citizens" if they expect that much.

"—mothers' fingers, babies' toes"

Parents from the hinterland who have new babies in the Capital observe that not only is the new infant foot-printed, as in other hospitals, but that the mother is also finger-printed on the same sheet of paper.

At hospitals here they say that the baby's footprint alone is not sufficient identification; that the addition of the mother's prints makes it positive; and that quite a few abandoned babies are thus identified. The new method is supposed to have been suggested by Edgar Hoover's FBI.

TREND TO McNUTT: Recently I have observed a significant change in the use of the word "opportunist" among some New Dealers. They used to throw it at Paul McNutt as an epithet, deriding his candidacy.

But lately they use the word "opportunist" as a compliment, an accolade, an award of merit. "Nowadays," they say, "a political leader must be an opportunist, to sense which way public opinion and the winds of change are blowing."

In fact, the word "opportunist" threatens to become a synonym for "liberal." McNutt is undeniably steering a liberal course this winter.

Youth Group Asks Support For Education

Commission Warns Against Cut in Funds To Pay Defense Costs

A warning against "the temptation" to economize on education during the war crisis in order "to find money for special defense budgets" came yesterday from the American Youth Commission in the last of three statements on major policy.

Citing the educational deficiencies even in peace, the commission director, Dr. Floyd W. Reeves, asserted:

"The outbreak of war in Europe renders it imperative that renewed attention be given to the deficiencies in education of our youth. There is every reason to believe that a defective educational system weakens the ability of a nation in time of crisis, diminishes the nation's power to protect its security without war, and in case of war will reduce its fighting strength."

As essential steps of remedy, the commission recommended:

Immediate improvement of school programs to meet modern objectives so as to prepare young people "for work, for use of leisure time, for home membership, for health and, above all, for citizenship in a democracy."

Reorganization of financial and administrative systems in local and State educational units, with increased Federal aid to the States for education.

More adequate provision to help young people whose parents are too poor to keep them in school, and, specifically, expansion of the student-aid and work-study programs of the National Youth Administration and Civilian Conservation Corps.

3,000,000 Illiterates

Quoting statistics, the Commission held the American people cannot be described as well educated, despite advancements in the past century.

Of 75,000,000 adults, approximately 36,000,000 did not finish elementary school, it said. Probably half that number failed to finish the fourth grade. At least 3,000,000 are illiterate. "Half of the young people who have left school have not finished the ninth grade and many of them have had far less than nine years schooling," it was said.

The "poor quality of the average school" is caused partly by extravagant administration and partly by impoverished school districts, it said. Specific recommendations for the reorganization of the financial and administrative systems were made as follows:

Amalgamation among the 120,000 local school districts in the Nation to produce economy and efficiency, reducing the number of districts "to a few thousand at most." Increased aid to local school districts by some States and better distribution of funds by others. Expanded federal aid to help equalize educational opportunities among the wealthier and poorer States.

Aid to Destitute Cited

"Special attention is needed," it said, "for children of destitute families in order to make school attendance possible up to the age of 16. Above the age of 16, many young people are enabled to continue their education through the student-aid program of the NYA. This program should be continued and improved, particularly at the secondary school level.

"The work-and-study programs for unemployed out-of-school youth that are administered respectively by the CCC and the NYA are beginning to achieve major educational values. The educational aspects of these programs should be strengthened and further developed."

Concerning "the tendency to economize on education" to find money for defense, it was said:

"Such an opinion would be short-sighted even from a strictly military point of view, since the skill and intelligence of the soldier are more important in this day of technological warfare than ever before."

Education to Help Defense

Education, it was concluded, is established "in public policy, not as a secondary interest, but as the first line of defense against that internal breakdown which in many nations has proved to be even more dangerous than external attack.

"In the present situation there is danger not only that the financial support of schools and other educational institutions may be curtailed when it should be expanded; there is also the far more important danger that in the heat of controversy the schools may fail to achieve their most important objectives; so to educate the young that conflict of opinion on current issues of the day will be changed into a search for truth and for a wise course of action,' said the commission.

The American Youth Commission was established in 1935 by the American Council on Education, a non-governmental organization composed of major national educational associations and institutions. Owen D. Young has presided since the death of Newton D. Baker, the first chairman.

U. S. Owes Youth a Start, N.Y.A. Educator Says in Forum

Many young people will always have to be given a start in life by government, Dr. Charles H. Judd, educational director of the National Youth Administration, declared last night.

Declaring European governments provide for young people in the period between their leaving school and absorption into private industry "by organizing armies," he added:

"In this country we want productive work done by young people rather than military service."

He quoted William James as arguing for a period of two or three years of work to be required of all young people and said such work "can be coupled with training in habits that promote health and prepare for intelligent citizenship."

Dr. Judd spoke in the Mutual System's Forum of the Air, along with Representative Plumley, of Vermont; Representative Keller, of Illinois; Ralph Hetzel, C. I. O. director of unemployment, and Howard Ennis, chairman of the Washington Youth Council.

On the general topic "What Can We Do About the Youth Problem?" Hetzel said:

"The first item on the agenda is jobs. Such jobs ought to be in private industry. But a war boom cannot give jobs to young people, as the American Youth Commission points out. If private industry cannot give jobs to our youth, then the Government must.

"It must give them because the integrity of our economic and political system is at stake as long as the young people—and the older ones, too—cannot use their willing two hands to earn a living. . . . It must do it also to stay out of war, so that the unemployment of youth ceases to be an insistent reminder that they would not be unemployed if we go to war."

Plumley, however, declared:

"The long-range, sound solution for this problem is not to be found through Government subsidies or programs of Government-made work. Such undertakings while very helpful, are but panaceas—shin plasters to ease the pain rather than a permanent cure.

"The only really sound and lasting solution is to get the business activity of the country back to its previous level of acceleration so that new jobs are constantly being created for the hundreds of thousands of young people who annually come out of the high schools and colleges of the country."

Keller, praising the vocational education program, insisted that "If industry fails to give these jobs, it becomes the undoubted duty of Government to see to it that those who do not find jobs in inustry shall be furnished with jobs—well-planned, well-justified, nationally financed jobs, where they can accomplish."

Guffey to Testify For Lawrence

Harrisburg, Pa., Dec. 3 (AP).—United States Senator Guffey, who broke with Democratic State Chairman David L. Lawrence in Pennsylvania's bitter 1938 primary, today was listed as the next defense witness in Lawrence's trial on blackmail and conspiracy charges.

Guffey's name was brought into the trial record by Spurgeon Bowser, former president of the Pioneer Materials Co., who the prosecution charges was blackmailed by Lawrence.

Waterway Control By I. C. C. Opposed

The Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association contended yesterday that pending legislation to place water shippers under control of the Interstate Commerce Commission had resulted in stoppage of construction of millions of dollars' worth of ships.

The assertion was made in communications to the Secretaries of War and the Navy.

Labor Awaits Anti-Trust Ruling Today

Supreme Court May Announce Decision In Chicago Milk Case

By International News Service

A decision of far-reaching import in the Government's current anti-trust campaign may be handed down by the Supreme Court today.

The tribunal has before it the so-called "Chicago milk case" involving, among other issues, the question of labor immunity from the Sherman antitrust act.

The Government is appealing a District court decision setting aside indictments charging restraint of trade against organized dairymen of the Chicago milk shed, several Chicago dairies, the city's milkmen's union, and some of its officials.

Holds Act Exempts Labor

The lower court based its action upon the defendant's contention that Congress had immunized persons controlling the production and marketing of farm products from prosecution under the antitrust law.

Joseph A. Padway, general counsel for the American Federation of Labor, has interposed the added contention that the Sherman act, itself, exempts labor unions from antitrust law proceedings.

Attorney General Murphy, in a letter to A. F. L. President William Green, said Padway's pleadings conceded application of the antitrust laws to unions had been upheld in several Supreme Court decisions. Padway, the Attorney General said, "frankly asked the court to overrule its former holdings."

Should the court uphold Padway, Justice Department attorneys conceded, their widespread prosecutions against unions, jobbers, contractors and manufacturers in the building trades will collapse.

May Rule on Wire-Tapping

Other issues which today's court session may settle include:

A question whether the Federal Government can present evidence procured by the tapping of intrastate telephone wires to convict defendants whose interstate messages it was unable to intercept.

An appeal by the National Labor Relations Board from a circuit court decision striking out its order upon the Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Co. to disestablish a "company union."

A case challenging authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission to prescribe labor conditions on a railroad whose organization it has been called on to approve.

Russians Ignorant Of Finnish War, Kerensky Asserts

Copyright by New York Times.

New York, Dec. 3.—Alexander Kerensky, former Russian premier and leader of the 1917 revolution that led to the overthrow of the Czarist regime, issued a statement today appealing to American public opinion "not to confuse Stalin's invasion of Finland with the real wishes of the Russian people."

"All of us Russian democrats and true Russian patriots protest against the shameful and dishonorable action of Stalin in Finland," Kerensky said.

"The cables frm Moscow now show clearly that Stalin's assault on Finland is being carried out not only without the consent of the Russian people but even without their knowledge.

"The Bolsheviki falsify history, as they do everything else, when they claim to have granted independence to Finland. The Finns compelled them to grant this independence by force of arms, when they defeated the Bolshevist uprising in Finland engineered by Lenin and Trotsky in 1918."

Bridges Held Stronger Than Dewey for '40

Gov. Murphy Says G. O. P. Chances Hinge On Labor Attitude

Gov. Francis P. Murphy, of New Hampshire, last night came out for Senator H. Styles Bridges as a potentially stronger candidate for the Republican nomination for President than Thomas E. Dewey, of New York.

Murphy said he believed that New England would give Bridges, New Hampshire Senator and New Deal foe, its votes in convention "while New York, I understand, is in a 50-50 division for Dewey."

He saw Republican hopes for success depending on the stand toward labor. "One thing, and one of the most important, is for the Republican Party to stand four-square in guaranteeing the workers of our Nation a share in the profits of industry," he said. "It must pledge itself to labor."

In Washington to try and persuade the wage-hour division to permit New Hampshire to handle, through its own labor department the administration of certain labor act phases, Gov. Murphy, in an interview at the Mayflower Hotel, talked frankly on politics but only philosophically about the change of Thanksgiving dates—which his State didn't.

Simply remarking that Thanksgiving was an Old New England custom going back a long time, he turned again to Senator Bridges with the observation that he considers "Senator Bridges a stronger candidate potentially than Mr. Dewey because he has had the experience of administering governmental functions."

He recited Bridges' public experience, including his service as Governor and in the Senate, "which gives him a better grasp of the economic and national conditions of our Nation."

Mead Revives Plea for U. S. Credit for Small Business

Senator Mead (Democrat), of New York, last night asked support of a bill which he introduced at the last session of Congress to provide long-term credit to small business.

He said that survey "of unsatisfied legitimate credit needs simply" do not bear out the contention that ample means exist for loans to small business. Senator Mead declared he has been receiving complaints from businessmen that their loan needs are not being filled.

If credit is not provided, small business, he asserted, will not participate in the business upswing. "Credit strangulation" is badly handicapping the small fellow, he said, adding:

"It is misleading to the public to hear on the radio or to read in the papers that the general demand upon the RFC for long-term, low-interest credit on the part of small business is diminishing. It is just as misleading to read that two-thirds of such applications formally considered are approved.

Mead's bill proposes the setting up of the Industrial Loan Corporation with a capital of $139,000,000 taken from the increment resulting from the devaluation of the dollar. The corporation would have powers to issue obligations up to $500,000,000.

Mead declared his plan would supplement the lending facilities of commercial banks and, in this way "support rather than weaken the efforts of such banks to provide needed credit for their communities."

The members of the board of governors of the Federal Reserve System would be the directors of the Industrial Loan Corporation, while the chairman and the vice chairman of the board of governors would be chairman and vice chairman, respectively, of the corporation.

The 12 Federal Reserve Banks would act as agents of the corporation.

Veteran Calls Pension Bill Legion 'Raid'

Luchars Flays Plan To Pay Widows of All War Service Men

By Edward T. Folliard

The American Legion was accused yesterday of planning "an election year Treasury raid."

The attack came from Robert B. Luchars, national commander of the American Veterans, an organization of 17,000 World War veterans, which, since 1931, has been waging a battle against granting pensions to war veterans who suffered no injuries while in uniform.

Commander Luchars' blast at the Legion was inspired by a story in The Washington Post which told of the Legion's plan for a determined fight to have the next Congress grant pensions to all widows and orphans of World War veterans.

Luchars said that the Legion's bill would place the widow of a man who served unharmed in a training camp in the United States on a par with the widow of a soldier killed in France.

Widows Favored

"The American Veterans Association," Luchars said, "has always vigorously maintained that the widows and dependents of those who died as a result of injury or disease incurred in active military service should be generously dealt with, and that the pittance of $37.50 a month should be nearly doubled.

"We know that it is not the wish of the American public to pay a pension to the widow of a man who suffered in no way as a result of his war service. The duty between the state and the veteran is reciprocal. If he returns none the worse for his military service, he has but discharged his duty. He holds no mortgage on the taxpayers' money for himself and his dependents."

Luchars said that, under legislation similar to that now proposed by the American Legion, the last Revolutionary War widow received a pension until 1906. She was born 23 years after the conflict ended.

Luchars said that the Legion bill—introduced by Representative Rankin (Democrat), of Mississippi, would grant pensions to widows of World War veterans, even though these widows were born after the Armistice.

"Now the Legion steps forward with a bill to bring every World War widow—whether her husband saw action or not, whether she was alive during the war or not—into the Federal pension fold," Luchars said.

"Worst of all, the measure would put the nonservice-connected widow virtually on a par with the widow of the combat dead."

Comdr. Luchars, who lives in Montclair, N. J., came to Washington last week to confer with Cornelius H. Bull, general counsel of the American Veterans Association.

Grabbing Is Charged

Bull said that Col. John Thomas Taylor, legislative representative of the American Legion, apparently had determined to "grab while the grabbing is good."

Col. Taylor and Raymond J. Kelly, national commander of the American Legion, told The Post last week that the American people ought to understand that the cost of war necessarily had to include the cost of taking care of the disabled and of the dependents of veterans who die. It was just as much a part of the cost, they said, as the purchase of arms and munitions.

Col. Taylor said that the drive for pensions for widows and orphans would be the most intensive conducted by the Legion since the fight for adjusted compensation, popularly called the bonus.

U. S. Finns Mark War-Torn Nation's Independence Day

Copyright, 1939, by New York Tribune, Inc.

New York, Dec. 3.—The twenty-second anniversary of Finland's independence was celebrated this afternoon by more than 1,500 men, women and children of Finnish descent who crowded into the Yorkville Casino.

They heard and sang their national music, listened to tributes to the Finnish spirit, and between the speeches talked to each other in low voices about their country's four-day-old war.

Some of them were dressed in Finnish national costume. Many of the men wore medals won in Finland's war against the Bolsheviks in 1917.

The war hung heavy over the celebration, but only intensified its Finnish spirit. In marked contrast with similar celebrations in recent years the audience tacitly elected to talk their native language even when many of them would have felt more fluent in English.

Cleveland Relief Clients Plan New Hunger March

Cleveland, Dec. 3 (AP).—A new "march" on the City Hall to seek food for 60,000 relief dependents described as "starving" was in the making tonight.

A small group of unemployed, responding to 10,000 handbills distributed at relief stations, trudged through the rain to a meeting of the Federal Workers Union and demanded the city "use all available funds, regardless of their source, to feed the people."

The council resumes work tomorrow on plans to raise $1,655,000 by issuance of $1,115,000 in bonds against anticipated collection of realty property taxes and collection of $540,000 the city claims is due from Cuyahoga County for care of indigent tubercular patients.

Maverick to Ask Directed Verdict

San Antonio, Tex., Dec. 3 (U.P.).—Mayor Maury Maverick's defense counsel planned tonight to seek an instructed verdict of not guilty without producing a witness to sustain Maverick's denial of charges that he paid poll taxes for union workers in the last city election.

District Judge Bryce Ferguson expressed doubt as the State closed its case last night that sufficient testimony had been offered, exclusive of the recounted conversations in which Maverick had no part, to support a conviction.

N. Y. Students Fight Ban on Browder Talk

Red Chief May Obtain Delay in Trial Set in Federal Court Today

By International News Service

New York, Dec. 3.—Earl Browder, American Communist Party chieftain, is scheduled to go on trial in Federal court tomorrow on charges of fraudulently obtaining United States passports under assumed names, but technicalities arising from the case may force delay on the trial opening.

Browder instituted a fight today to gain permission to give a speech at the College of the City of New York.

Dr. Harry N. Wright, in charge of activities at the evening session of the college, temporarily withdrew permission for a speech arranged for December 11, pending a meeting tomorrow of the heads of New York's four tax-supported colleges.

The presidents of City, Hunter, Brooklyn and Queens colleges will formulate a general policy governing invitations to outside speakers, and final action on the Browder speech will be taken in accord with that policy, Dr. Wright said Saturday.

The student legislative congress of City College, which tendered the first invitation to Browder, immediately called an emergency meeting for tomorrow afternoon.

Representatives of "Main Events," the evening session student publication, one of the Browder meeting sponsors, also arranged a special meeting to protest the faculty action. The faculty committee on student activities also will meet to discuss advisability of permitting Browder to take the rustrum in the Great Hall of the college.

Browder is free in $7,500 bail on a two-count indictment handed up to Federal Judge Coxe last month. He faces a maximum penalty of 10 years in jail and $4,000 in fines.

The Government charges he used the names of "Nicholas Dozenberg," "George Morris" and "Albert Henry Richards" in applying for passports, and then, in 1934, obtained a passport under his own name after stating he never held a passport before.

U. S. Is Advised To Study Reforms In Scandinavia

The greatest service American can render democracy is to kep out of war and take care of its problems at home, Dr. Ben A. Arneson, former special adviser to the Budget Bureau, said last night.

Speaking to the Washington Alumni of Ohio Wesleyan University, he said the United States has much to learn from Scandinavia in the fields of housing, unemployment insurance, collective bargaining and all forms of social security.

A visiting professor of political science at American University from 1936 to 1938, Dr. Arneson is author of a book on "The Democratic Monarchies of Scandinavia."

So You Don't Believe in Santa? Police Are Tearing Up Tickets

And Victim Offers Sauces to Turkey Thief As Christmas Spirit Sweeps Country; In-Laws and Drunks Provide Other Quirks

By Gladwin Hill

Associated Press Staff Writer

New York, Dec. 3.—Advance Christmas spirit swept across the country in some fascinating manifestations last week.

Police of Lafayette, Ind., announced that no more overtime parking tickets would be given out until after Christmas . . . and Boston police announced that all tickets issued to spectators at a pre-Christmas parade had been torn up.

In Meridian, Miss., when somebody stole George Hall's Thanksgiving turkey, he advertised that he would supply cranberry sauce to go with it; a couple of days later somebody stole an opossum from him and Hall offered to provide suitable sweet potatoes.

A Philadelphia fireman, called on the carpet for being absent from work, explained that six in-laws had moved in on him in one day, and "I was so worn out remonstrating that I couldn't go to work!"

Tough-luck laurels go to the Bloomington, Ind., girl who, just after a black cat crossed her path, was nicked by a stray bullet—apparently intended for the cat!

On other fronts, the vagaries of the human race were no less amazing:

The new District attorney of Brooklyn announced that he would begin his administration by fingerprinting all his assistants . . . A Cleveland baseball player applied for unemployment insurance benefits during his winter layoff . . . And when low tide prevented his gunboat from docking, the President of Mexico just jumped into his bathing suit and swam ashore!

When a Waterbury, Conn., man telephoned the police to come and arrest him for being drunk, the police told him that if he was sober enough to 'phone, he was not drunk enough to arrest, and to please go home.

A man elected justice of the peace in Easton, Pa., promptly resigned and urged the appointment of his opponent . . . and when a Teaneck, N. J., man walked into the police station to report a brush fire, officers called his attention to the fact that there was a fire in his hat.

A New York man went to the opera with a portable radio . . . Two International Falls, Minn., hunters were unable to hire a guide because the guide was lost in the woods . . . And the city of Peabody, Mass., announced that people delinquent in their water bills would be penalized not by having their water shut off, but by having it reduced to an exasperating trickle.

Soviet government in 1933 increased yesterday.

The Republican National Committee made public excerpts from statements by Repuplicans who had opposed the recognition.

Beginning with a statement by Secretary of State Charles Evans Hughes in 1925, the release quoted Presidents Harding, Coolidge and Hoover, Secretary of State Frank B. Kellogg and others in opposition to resuming diplomatic relations with the Mascow regime.

Secretary Hughes, now Chief Justice, said:

"Not only would it be a mistaken policy to give encouragement to repudiation and confiscation, but it is also important to remember that there should be no encouragement to those efforts of the Soviet authorities to visit upon other peoples the disasters that have overwhelmed the Russian people."

President Harding was quoted:

"I can see Russia only as the supreme tragedy and a world warning, the dangers of which we must fight if our heritage is to be preserved."

An excerpt from President Coolidge said:

"Our Government does not propose . . . to enter into relations with another regime which refuses to recognize the sanctity of international obligations."

Others quoted included Senators Vandenberg, of Michigan, and Barbour, of New Jersey, and Representative Fish, New York, and Tinkham, Massachusetts.

On Saturday former President Hoover said that "Mr. Roosevelt gave recognition to the Communist government by treaty and the exchange of ambassadors. That gave them standing as a decent member of the family of nations."

Federal Security Administrator McNutt, whose campaign for the Democratic nomination has assumed some appearances of New Deal sponsorship, conferred here yesterday with Frank McHale, his campaign manager; Oscar R. Ewing, New York attorney, and M. L. Fansler, chief justice of the Indiana Supreme Court.

McHale, who has completed a tour of 32 States, told McNutt that the drive for delegates to the Democratic convention "looks very encouraging." He said he was "more than satisfied" with the situation in New England, after a trip through Massachusetts, Maine, Connecticut and Rhode Island.

1,200 Attend Dedication of Church Here

Archbishop Curley Presides in Rites at Holy Comforter

More than 1,200 people, including 50 priests from Maryland and Washington, yesterday saw Archbishop Michael J. Curley dedicate the new $200,000 Holy Comforter Catholic Church at Fourteenth and East Capitol streets.

As the ceremonies opened, the prelate, white and red-garbed altar boys and participating clerics joined in a procession from the new rectory to the church. Members of the Fourth Degree, Knights of Columbus, swords gleaming at their sides and wearing red, white and blue baldrics, formed an honor guard.

While a brown-robed group of Franciscan brothers chanted near the church steps, Archbishop Curley walked around to bless the building, then returned to enter the sanctuary to take part in services of solemn high mass.

Mgr. Connolly Speaks

Principal speaker on the occasion, Mgr. Eugene J. Connolly, rector of St. Peter's Church and dean of Catholic clergy in the Washington Archdiocesse, said "this new church will daily remind man that there is a world beyond this one."

"It will also remind that there is a supernatural whose church above guards the sacred rights and liberties of men," he declared.

Assisting in the mass were priests who once served as assistants at Holy Comforter Church, which has been led since 1936 by Mgr. Charles R. O'Hara, among those recently elevated to the domestic prelacy.

The Rev. Edward J. A. Nestor, pastor of St. John's Church, Long Green, Md., assistant at Holy Comforter for 14 years, celebrated the mass; the Rev. John Sinnott Martin, pastor of Holy Family Church, Randallstown, Md., was deacon, and the Rev. Joseph Denges, chaplain of Gallinger Hospital, sub-deacon. Mgr. Harry A. Quinn, rector of the Cathedral in Baltimore, served as master of ceremonies.

Ground Broken in 1938

Assistants to the Archbishop were the Rev. Raymond D. Meyer, S. S., of St. Mary's Seminary, Roland Park, Baltimore, and the Rev. Leo J. McCormick, of Catholic University. Former altar boy at Holy Comforter, Father McCormick's family is still connected with the congregation.

Ground was broken in July, 1938, for the project, which includes the church and the rectory. Holy Comforter congregation was founded in 1904 through the efforts of the late Cardinal Gibbons and others. The late Rev. Joseph I. Maguire was first rector.

Following the mass, visiting priests dined in the Holy Comforter School auditorium.

Dr. Holmstrom Commits Suicide; Leaves 3 Notes

Dr. Carl G. Holmstrom, 65, was found dead yesterday in an apartment above his own at 1604 Nineteenth street northwest. He was lying on a table, a blanket covering his head and the top of a gas stove, one jet of which was open. Dr. A. Magruder MacDonald, District coroner, issued a certificate of suicide.

Police said three notes were found, one to a son, Gustav H. Holmstrom of Chicago; one to the tenant of the apartment in which he was found, apologizing for making use of the kitchen; the third to the press. In this note, Dr. Holmstrom explained he had taken his own life because of "foul air" in the building from a heating system.

Dr. MacDonald said he was informed Dr. Holmstrom owned the building and let the apartment in which he was found. His son was notified.

Batista to Retire From Army to Run For Presidency

Havana, Cuba, Dec. 3 (AP).—The Army Press Bureau announced tonight that Col. Fulgencio Batista, chief of the army, would retire from the army Wednesday, a move which political observers believed paved the way for him to become a presidential candidate. Command of the armed forces will be turned over to Col. Jose Pedraza, supervisor of the army and chief of the national police.

President Laredo Bru today approved a measure modifying the military retirement law making it possible for Batista to retire and register in a political party.

Col. Batista has been proclaimed the presidential candidate of the Liberal and Nationalist parties and the Communist Party has announced it will name him. The elections are scheduled February 28.

Pro-Finnish Mob Wrecks Reds' Hall

Communist 'Victory' Ball Halted by Riot At Aberdeen, Wash.

By the Associated Press

Aberdeen, Wash., Dec. 3.—Twenty-five persons were driven from a Communist dance hall and the three-story building partially wrecked by a crowd of 400 or 500 last night.

The raid on the hall climaxed a week of ill feeling engendered by scheduling of a Communist "victory" dance in competition with a patriotic meeting of Finnish immigrants and sympathizers.

The Finnish meeting, meanwhile, was held on schedule two blocks away, marred by no unusual incidents.

The anti-Communist crowd gathered in front of the dance building, known as "Workers Hall" or "Red Hall," an hour before the dance was to start. Men and boys began throwing stones through windows.

When the crowd advanced upon the building, those within fled through a rear door. The rioters battered down the door, pulled siding from the walls, ripped up flooring, tore out plumbing and telephones, threw radios from second-floor windows and smashed every door and window.

Pictures of Josef Stalin, Earl Browder and other Communist leaders were carried out and burned.

Aberdeen police, who at first denied any knowledge of the affair, did not appear until midnight, four hours after the rioting began, and dispersed stragglers.

Finnish leaders denied knowledge of the affair. Local Communist leaders could not be reached.

Fire Set While Family Dines Revives Capital's Arson Scare

Detective Chief Sets Special Watch In Woodley Place Neighborhood; Logs Under Porch Drenched With Gasoline

Fear that the firebug who started a series of blazes in the northwest section last week again is on the loose was aroused yesterday with discovery of a "set" fire under the back porch of the home of Edwin W. Spalding, retired attorney, 2640 Woodley place northwest.

Detective Chief Bernard W. Thompson ordered all precinct commanders to maintain special watches over houses in the neighborhood in case the pyromaniac should make new sallies.

Mr. and Mrs. Spalding said they were eating Sunday dinner when they smelled smoke and went outside to find a pile of firelogs under the back porch blazing. A can of gasoline had been sprinkled on the wood, according to Mrs. Spalding.

'I'm quite sure that it's the same can I left under the porch some time ago," she said.

They put out the blaze with buckets of water without assistance of firemen.

A man had asked at the back door for something to eat a short time before, but had left immediately, Spalding said. He could give no description of the man.

A maid at the home of Allister Cochrane, 2638 Woodley place, said she had heard children playing in the back yards of the two homes at about the time of the fire.

She declared she heard one boy say, "I'm going in and tell that lady what you did."

Firemen fought seven incendiary blazes which routed 200 persons from their beds within a few blocks of Woodley place early the morning of November 26.

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

OF THEE I SING

Since the oversize "defense" program got noised about, the Capital is overrun with prehensile gentlemen eager to catch some of the golden rain in their big baskets.

Harlan Miller

* * * *

Because Scotch highballs were served at his last reception, some of the conclusion-jumpers deem Henry Wallace still a 1940 candidate. Usually he—and his guests—are virtual teetotalers. It's likelier, of course, that the Wallaces merely conform with Washington custom to avoid being conspicuous.

* * * *

Another tale which amuses officers at the War Department concerns a British aviator who had been sent out to drop thousands of leaflets over Germany, but who returned two hours early. His flight commander was astounded.

√ √ √ √

"Surely," he said, "you couldn't have circled around per orders and dropped all those leaflets so soon!"

"I saved time, sir," he said, "by dropping them over in bales."

"Gad!" exclaimed the commander. "You might have hurt someone!"

"—new camps with drill"

At the War Department plans are being contemplated for 1,000 new CCC camps of a different sort, where the boys would receive two hours military drill daily along with their work.

√ √ √ √

These camps would be apart from the regular CCC camps, where no military drill is authorized. Their enrollees would volunteer specifically for the drill camps, and get $8 monthly, like the others, but not the $22 monthly relief for their families.

√ √ √ √

Such new camps with drill will avoid the possible charge that only poor men's sons are being trained for war. At 1,000 camps some 200,000 boys could be trained every six months or so (and it might be a grand thing for their health if men in their thirties were eligible too).

* * * *

Russia's invasion of Finland aroused more bitter indignation in the Capital than the attack on Poland. August officials are calling Stalin a so and so, not quite under their breath.

* * * *

Some of the inner-circle New Dealers are hinting that President Roosevelt may have nothing whatever to say about his third-term intentions between now and June, 1940. Nothing conclusive, that is; maybe a quip or two.

* * * *

New Capital wisecracks:

A Minnesota Congressman calls Hitler a "Germaniac."

Sneerers at the Townsend plan assert that the $200-a-month "senior citizens" should be called "senile citizens" if they expect that much.

"—mothers' fingers, babies' toes"

Parents from the hinterland who have new babies in the Capital observe that not only is the new infant foot-printed, as in other hospitals, but that the mother is also finger-printed on the same sheet of paper.

At hospitals here they say that the baby's footprint alone is not sufficient identification; that the addition of the mother's prints makes it positive; and that quite a few abandoned babies are thus identified. The new method is supposed to have been suggested by Edgar Hoover's FBI.

TREND TO McNUTT: Recently I have observed a significant change in the use of the word "opportunist" among some New Dealers. They used to throw it at Paul McNutt as an epithet, deriding his candidacy.

But lately they use the word "opportunist" as a compliment, an accolade, an award of merit. "Nowadays," they say, "a political leader must be an opportunist, to sense which way public opinion and the winds of change are blowing."

In fact, the word "opportunist" threatens to become a synonym for "liberal." McNutt is undeniably steering a liberal course this winter.

Youth Group Asks Support For Education

Commission Warns Against Cut in Funds To Pay Defense Costs

A warning against "the temptation" to economize on education during the war crisis in order "to find money for special defense budgets" came yesterday from the American Youth Commission in the last of three statements on major policy.

Citing the educational deficiencies even in peace, the commission director, Dr. Floyd W. Reeves, asserted:

"The outbreak of war in Europe renders it imperative that renewed attention be given to the deficiencies in education of our youth. There is every reason to believe that a defective educational system weakens the ability of a nation in time of crisis, diminishes the nation's power to protect its security without war, and in case of war will reduce its fighting strength."

As essential steps of remedy, the commission recommended:

Immediate improvement of school programs to meet modern objectives so as to prepare young people "for work, for use of leisure time, for home membership, for health and, above all, for citizenship in a democracy."

Reorganization of financial and administrative systems in local and State educational units, with increased Federal aid to the States for education.

More adequate provision to help young people whose parents are too poor to keep them in school, and, specifically, expansion of the student-aid and work-study programs of the National Youth Administration and Civilian Conservation Corps.

3,000,000 Illiterates

Quoting statistics, the Commission held the American people cannot be described as well educated, despite advancements in the past century.

Of 75,000,000 adults, approximately 36,000,000 did not finish elementary school, it said. Probably half that number failed to finish the fourth grade. At least 3,000,000 are illiterate. "Half of the young people who have left school have not finished the ninth grade and many of them have had far less than nine years schooling," it was said.

The "poor quality of the average school" is caused partly by extravagant administration and partly by impoverished school districts, it said. Specific recommendations for the reorganization of the financial and administrative systems were made as follows:

Amalgamation among the 120,000 local school districts in the Nation to produce economy and efficiency, reducing the number of districts "to a few thousand at most." Increased aid to local school districts by some States and better distribution of funds by others. Expanded Federal aid to help equalize educational opportunities among the wealthier and poorer States.

Aid to Destitute Cited

"Special attention is needed," it said, "for children of destitute families in order to make school attendance possible up to the age of 16. Above the age of 16, many young people are enabled to continue their education through the student-aid program of the NYA. This program should be continued and improved, particularly at the secondary school level.

"The work and study programs for unemployed out-of-school youth that are administered respectively by the CCC and the NYA are beginning to achieve major educational values. The educational aspects of these programs should be strengthened and further developed."

Concerning "the tendency to economize on education" to find money for defense, it was said:

"Such an opinion would be short-sighted even from a strictly military point of view, since the skill and intelligence of the soldier are more important in this day of technological warfare than ever before."

Education to Help Defense

Education, it was concluded, is established "in public policy, not as a secondary interest, but as the first line of defense against that internal breakdown which in many nations has proved to be even more dangerous than external attack.

"In the present situation there is danger not only that the financial support of schools and other educational institutions may be curtailed when it should be expanded; there is also the far more important danger that in the heat of controversy the schools may fail to achieve their most important objectives; so to educate the young that conflict of opinion on current issues of the day will be changed into a search for truth and for a wise course of action,'" said the commission.

The American Youth Commission was established in 1935 by the American Council on Education, a non-governmental organization composed of major national educational associations and institutions. Owen D. Young has presided since the death of Newton D. Baker, the first chairman.

U. S. Owes Youth a Start, N.Y.A. Educator Says in Forum

Many young people will always have to be given a start in life by government, Dr. Charles H. Judd, educational director of the National Youth Administration, declared last night.

Declaring European governments provide for young people in the period between their leaving school and absorption into private industry "by organizing armies," he added:

"In this country we want productive work done by young people rather than military service."

He quoted William James as arguing for a period of two or three years of work to be required of all young people and said such work "can be coupled with training in habits that promote health and prepare for intelligent citizenship."

Dr. Judd spoke in the Mutual System's Forum of the Air, along with Representative Plumley, of Vermont; Representative Keller, of Illinois; Ralph Hetzel, C. I. O. director of unemployment, and Howard Ennis, chairman of the Washington Youth Council.

On the general topic "What Can We Do About the Youth Problem?" Hetzel said:

"The first item on the agenda is jobs. Such jobs ought to be in private industry. But a war boom cannot give jobs to young people, as the American Youth Commission points out. If private industry cannot give jobs to our youth, then the Government must.

"It must give them because the integrity of our economic and political system is at stake as long as the young people—and the older ones, too—cannot use their willing two hands to earn a living. . . . It must do it also to stay out of war, so that the unemployment of youth ceases to be an insistent reminder that they would not be unemployed if we go to war."

Plumley, however, declared:

"The long-range, sound solution for this problem is not to be found through Government subsidies or programs of Government-made work. Such undertakings while very helpful, are but panaceas—shin plasters to ease the pain rather than a permanent cure.

"The only really sound and lasting solution is to get the business activity of the country back to its previous level of acceleration so that new jobs are constantly being created for the hundreds of thousands of young people who annually come out of the high schools and colleges of the country."

Keller, praising the vocational education program, insisted that "If industry fails to give these jobs, it becomes the undoubted duty of Government to see to it that those who do not find jobs in inustry shall be furnished with jobs—well-planned, well-justified, nationally financed jobs, where they can accomplish."

Guffey to Testify For Lawrence

Harrisburg, Pa., Dec. 3 (AP)—United States Senator Guffey, who broke with Democratic State Chairman David L. Lawrence in Pennsylvania's bitter 1938 primary, today was listed as the next defense witness in Lawrence's trial on blackmail and conspiracy charges.

Guffey's name was brought into the trial record by Spurgeon Bowser, former president of the Pioneer Materials Co., who the prosecution charges was blackmailed by Lawrence.

Labor Awaits Anti-Trust Ruling Today

Supreme Court May Announce Decision In Chicago Milk Case

By International News Service

A decision of far-reaching import in the Government's current anti-trust campaign may be handed down by the Supreme Court today.

The tribunal has before it the so-called "Chicago milk case" involving, among other issues, the question of labor immunity from the Sherman antitrust act.

The Government is appealing a District court decision setting aside indictments charging restraint of trade against organized dairymen of the Chicago milk shed, several Chicago dairies, the city's milkmen's union, and some of its officials.

Holds Act Exempts Labor

The lower court based its action upon the defendant's contention that Congress had immunized persons controlling the production and marketing of farm products from prosecution under the antitrust law.

Joseph A. Padway, general counsel for the American Federation of Labor, has interposed the added contention that the Sherman act, itself, exempts labor unions from antitrust law proceedings.

Attorney General Murphy, in a letter to A. F. L. President William Green, said Padway's pleadings conceded application of the antitrust laws to unions had been upheld in several Supreme Court decisions. Padway, the Attorney General said, "frankly asked the court to overrule its former holdings."

Should the court uphold Padway, Justice Department attorneys conceded, their widespread prosecutions against unions, jobbers, contractors and manufacturers in the building trades will collapse.

May Rule on Wire-Tapping

Other issues which today's court session may settle include:

A question whether the Federal Government can present evidence procured by the tapping of intrastate telephone wires to convict defendants whose interstate messages it was unable to intercept.

An appeal by the National Labor Relations Board from a circuit court decision striking out its order upon the Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Co. to disestablish a "company union."

A case challenging authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission to prescribe labor conditions on a railroad whose organization it has been called on to approve.

Russians Ignorant Of Finnish War, Kerensky Asserts

Copyright by New York Times.

New York, Dec. 3.—Alexander Kerensky, former Russian premier and leader of the 1917 revolution that led to the overthrow of the Czarist regime, issued a statement today appealing to American public opinion "not to confuse Stalin's invasion of Finland with the real wishes of the Russian people."

"All of us Russian democrats and true Russian patriots protest against the shameful and dishonorable action of Stalin in Finland," Kerensky said.

"The cables frm Moscow now show clearly that Stalin's assault on Finland is being carried out not only without the consent of the Russian people but even without their knowledge.

"The Bolsheviki falsify history, as they do everything else, when they claim to have granted independence to Finland. The Finns compelled them to grant this independence by force of arms, when they defeated the Bolshevist uprising in Finland engineered by Lenin and Trotsky in 1918."

Bridges Held Stronger Than Dewey for '40

Gov. Murphy Says G. O. P. Chances Hinge On Labor Attitude

Gov. Francis P. Murphy, of New Hampshire, last night came out for Senator H. Styles Bridges as a potentially stronger candidate for the Republican nomination for President than Thomas E. Dewey, of New York.

Murphy said he believed that New England would give Bridges, New Hampshire Senator and New Deal foe, its votes in convention "while New York, I understand, is in a 50-50 division for Dewey."

He saw Republican hopes for success depending on the stand toward labor. "One thing, and one of the most important, is for the Republican Party to stand four-square in guaranteeing the workers of our Nation a share in the profits of industry," he said. "It must pledge itself to labor."

In Washington to try and persuade the wage-hour division to permit New Hampshire to handle, through its own labor department the administration of certain labor act phases, Gov. Murphy, in an interview at the Mayflower Hotel, talked frankly on politics but only philosophically about the change of Thanksgiving dates—which his State didn't.

Simply remarking that Thanksgiving was an Old New England custom going back a long time, he turned again to Senator Bridges with the observation that he considers "Senator Bridges a stronger candidate potentially than Mr. Dewey because he has had the experience of administering governmental functions."

He recited Bridges' public experience, including his service as Governor and in the Senate, "which gives him a better grasp of the economic and national conditions of our Nation."

Mead Revives Plea for U. S. Credit for Small Business

Senator Mead (Democrat), of New York, last night asked support of a bill which he introduced at the last session of Congress to provide long-term credit to small business.

He said that survey "of unsatisfied legitimate credit needs simply" do not bear out the contention that ample means exist for loans to small business. Senator Mead declared he has been receiving complaints from businessmen that their loan needs are not being filled.

If credit is not provided, small business, he asserted, will not participate in the business upswing. "Credit strangulation" is badly handicapping the small fellow, he said, adding:

"It is misleading to the public to hear on the radio or to read in the papers that the general demand upon the RFC for long-term, low-interest credit on the part of small business is diminishing. It is just as misleading to read that two-thirds of such applications formally considered are approved.

Mead's bill proposes the setting up of the Industrial Loan Corporation with a capital of $139,000,000 taken from the increment resulting from the devaluation of the dollar. The corporation would have powers to issue obligations up to $500,000,000.

Mead declared his plan would supplement the lending facilities of commercial banks and, in this way "support rather than weaken the efforts of such banks to provide needed credit for their communities."

The members of the board of governors of the Federal Reserve System would be the directors of the Industrial Loan Corporation, while the chairman and the vice chairman of the board of governors would be chairman and vice chairman, respectively, of the corporation.

The 12 Federal Reserve Banks would act as agents of the corporation.

75 Homeless As Fire Razes Virginia Village

Pounding Mill, Va., Dec. 3 (AP)—Approximately 75 persons were made homeless here tonight when fire of undetermined origin virtually destroyed this town of 250 population.

The fire razed seven dwellings, one store, the United States post-office building and a church, and partially destroyed the passenger station of the Norfolk & Western Railway and four other store buildings.

Veteran Calls Pension Bill Legion 'Raid'

Luchars Flays Plan To Pay Widows of All War Service Men

By Edward T. Folliard

The American Legion was accused yesterday of planning "an election year Treasury raid."

The attack came from Robert B. Luchars, national commander of the American Veterans, an organization of 17,000 World War veterans, which, since 1931, has been waging a battle against granting pensions to war veterans who suffered no injuries while in uniform.

Commander Luchars' blast at the Legion was inspired by a story in The Washington Post which told of the Legion's plan for a determined fight to have the next Congress grant pensions to all widows and orphans of World War veterans.

Luchars said that the Legion's bill would place the widow of a man who served unharmed in a training camp in the United States on a par with the widow of a soldier killed in France.

Widows Favored

"The American Veterans Association," Luchars said, "has always vigorously maintained that the widows and dependents of those who died as a result of injury or disease incurred in active military service should be generously dealt with, and that the pittance of $37.50 a month should be nearly doubled.

"We know that it is not the wish of the American public to pay a pension to the widow of a man who suffered in no way as a result of his war service. The duty between the state and the veteran is reciprocal. If he returns none the worse for his military service, he has but discharged his duty. He holds no mortgage on the taxpayers' money for himself and his dependents."

Luchars said that, under legislation similar to that now proposed by the American Legion, the last Revolutionary War widow received a pension until 1906. She was born 23 years after the conflict ended.

Luchars said that the Legion bill—introduced by Representative Rankin (Democrat), of Mississippi, would grant pensions to widows of World War veterans, even though these widows were born after the Armistice.

"Now the Legion steps forward with a bill to bring every World War widow—whether her husband saw action or not, whether she was alive during the war or not—into the Federal pension fold," Luchars said.

"Worst of all, the measure would put the nonservice-connected widow virtually on a par with the widow of the combat dead."

Comdr. Luchars, who lives in Montclair, N. J., came to Washington last week to confer with Cornelius H. Bull, general counsel of the American Veterans Association.

Grabbing Is Charged

Bull said that Col. John Thomas Taylor, legislative representative of the American Legion, apparently had determined to "grab while the grabbing is good."

Col. Taylor and Raymond J. Kelly, national commander of the American Legion, told The Post last week that the American people ought to understand that the cost of war necessarily had to include the cost of taking care of the disabled and of the dependents of veterans who die. It was just as much a part of the cost, they said, as the purchase of arms and munitions.

Col. Taylor said that the drive for pensions for widows and orphans would be the most intensive conducted by the Legion since the fight for adjusted compensation, popularly called the bonus.

1,200 Attend Dedication of Church Here

More than 1,200 people, including 50 priests from Maryland and Washington, yesterday saw Archbishop Michael J. Curley dedicate the new $200,000 Holy Comforter Catholic Church at Fourteenth and East Capitol streets.

As the ceremonies opened, the prelate, white and red-garbed altar boys and participating clerics joined in a procession from the new rectory to the church. Members of the Fourth Degree, Knights of Columbus, swords gleaming at their sides and wearing red, white and blue baldrics, formed an honor guard.

While a brown-robed group of Franciscan brothers chanted near the church steps, Archbishop Curley walked around to bless the building, then returned to enter the sanctuary to take part in services of solemn high mass.

Mgr. Connolly Speaks

Principal speaker on the occasion, Mgr. Eugene J. Connolly, rector of St. Peter's Church and dean of Catholic clergy in the Washington Archdiocesse, said "this new church will daily remind man that there is a world beyond this one."

"It will also remind that there is a supernatural whose church above guards the sacred rights and liberties of men," he declared.

Assisting in the mass were priests who once served as assistants at Holy Comforter Church, which has been led since 1936 by Mgr. Charles R. O'Hara, among those recently elevated to the domestic prelacy.

The Rev. Edward J. A. Nestor, pastor of St. John's Church, Long Green, Md., assistant at Holy Comforter for 14 years, celebrated the mass; the Rev. John Sinnott Martin, pastor of Holy Family Church, Randallstown, Md., was deacon, and the Rev. Joseph Denges, chaplain of Gallinger Hospital, sub-deacon. Mgr. Harry A. Quinn, rector of the Cathedral in Baltimore, served as master of ceremonies.

Ground Broken in 1938

Assistants to the Archbishop were the Rev. Raymond D. Meyer, S. S., of St. Mary's Seminary, Roland Park, Baltimore, and the Rev. Leo J. McCormick, of Catholic University. Former altar boy at Holy Comforter, Father McCormick's family is still connected with the congregation.

Ground was broken in July, 1938, for the project, which includes the church and the rectory. Holy Comforter congregation was founded in 1904 through the efforts of the late Cardinal Gibbons and others. The late Rev. Joseph I. Maguire was first rector.

Following the mass, visiting priests dined in the Holy Comforter School auditorium.

Detective Chief Sets Special Watch In Woodley Place Neighborhood; Logs Under Porch Drenched With Gasoline

Fear that the firebug who started a series of blazes in the northwest section last week again is on the loose was aroused yesterday with discovery of a "set" fire under the back porch of the home of Edwin W. Spalding, retired attorney, 2640 Woodley place northwest.

Detective Chief Bernard W. Thompson ordered all precinct commanders to maintain special watches over houses in the neighborhood in case the pyromaniac should make new sallies.

Mr. and Mrs. Spalding said they were eating Sunday dinner when they smelled smoke and went outside to find a pile of firelogs under the back porch blazing. A can of gasoline had been sprinkled on the wood, according to Mrs. Spalding.

"I'm quite sure that it's the same can I left under the porch some time ago," she said.

They put out the blaze with buckets of water without assistance of firemen.

A man had asked at the back door for something to eat a short time before, but had left immediately, Spalding said. He could give no description of the man.

A maid at the home of Allister Cochrane, 2638 Woodley place, said she had heard children playing in the back yards of the two homes at about the time of the fire.

She declared she heard one boy say, "I'm going in and tell that lady what you did."

Firemen fought seven incendiary blazes which routed 200 persons from their beds within a few blocks of Woodley place early the morning of November 26.

N. Y. Students Fight Ban on Browder Talk

By International News Service

New York, Dec. 3.—Earl Browder, American Communist Party chieftain, is scheduled to go on trial in Federal court tomorrow on charges of fraudulently obtaining United States passports under assumed names, but technicalities arising from the case may force delay on the trial opening.

Browder instituted a fight today to gain permission to give a speech at the College of the City of New York.

Dr. Harry N. Wright, in charge of activities at the evening session of the college, temporarily withdrew permission for a speech arranged for December 11, pending a meeting tomorrow of the heads of New York's four tax-supported colleges.

The presidents of City, Hunter, Brooklyn and Queens colleges will formulate a general policy governing invitations to outside speakers, and final action on the Browder speech will be taken in accord with that policy, Dr. Wright said Saturday.

The student legislative congress of City College, which tendered the first invitation to Browder, immediately called an emergency meeting for tomorrow afternoon.

Representatives of "Main Events," the evening session student publication, one of the Browder meeting sponsors, also arranged a special meeting to protest the faculty action. The faculty committee on student activities also will meet to discuss advisability of permitting Browder to take the rustrum in the Great Hall of the college.

Browder is free in $7,500 bail on a two-count indictment handed up to Federal Judge Coxe last month. He faces a maximum penalty of 10 years in jail and $4,000 in fines.

The Government charges he used the names of "Nicholas Dozenberg," "George Morris" and "Albert Henry Richards" in applying for passports, and then, in 1934, obtained a passport under his own name after stating he never held a passport before.

So You Don't Believe in Santa? Police Are Tearing Up Tickets

And Victim Offers Sauces to Turkey Thief As Christmas Spirit Sweeps Country; In-Laws and Drunks Provide Other Quirks

By Gladwin Hill

Associated Press Staff Writer

New York, Dec. 3.—Advance Christmas spirit swept across the country in some fascinating manifestations last week.

Police of Lafayette, Ind., announced that no more overtime parking tickets would be given out until after Christmas . . . and Boston police announced that all tickets issued to spectators at a pre-Christmas parade had been torn up.

In Meridian, Miss., when somebody stole George Hall's Thanksgiving turkey, he advertised that he would supply cranberry sauce to go with it; a couple of days later somebody stole an opossum from him and Hall offered to provide suitable sweet potatoes.

A Philadelphia fireman, called on the carpet for being absent from work, explained that six in-laws had moved in on him in one day, and "I was so worn out remonstrating that I couldn't go to work!"

Tough-luck laurels go to the Bloomington, Ind., girl who, just after a black cat crossed her path, was nicked by a stray bullet—apparently intended for the cat!

On other fronts, the vagaries of the human race were no less amazing:

The new District attorney of Brooklyn announced that he would begin his administration by fingerprinting all his assistants . . . A Cleveland baseball player applied for unemployment insurance benefits during his winter layoff . . . And when low tide prevented his gunboat from docking, the President of Mexico just jumped into his bathing suit and swam ashore!

When a Waterbury, Conn., man telephoned the police to come and arrest him for being drunk, the police told him that if he was sober enough to 'phone, he was not drunk enough to arrest, and to please go home.

A man elected justice of the peace in Easton, Pa., promptly resigned and urged the appointment of his opponent . . . and when a Teaneck, N. J., man walked into the police station to report a brush fire, officers called his attention to the fact that there was a fire in his hat.

A New York man went to the opera with a portable radio . . . Two International Falls, Minn., hunters were unable to hire a guide because the guide was lost in the woods . . . And the city of Peabody, Mass., announced that people delinquent in their water bills would be penalized not by having their water shut off, but by having it reduced to an exasperating trickle.

Soviet government in 1933 increased yesterday.

The Republican National Committee made public excerpts from statements by Repuplicans who had opposed the recognition.

Beginning with a statement by Secretary of State Charles Evans Hughes in 1925, the release quoted Presidents Harding, Coolidge and Hoover, Secretary of State Frank B. Kellogg and others in opposition to resuming diplomatic relations with the Mascow regime.

Secretary Hughes, now Chief Justice, said:

"Not only would it be a mistaken policy to give encouragement to repudiation and confiscation, but it is also important to remember that there should be no encouragement to those efforts of the Soviet authorities to visit upon other peoples the disasters that have overwhelmed the Russian people."

President Harding was quoted:

"I can see Russia only as the supreme tragedy and a world warning, the dangers of which we must fight if our heritage is to be preserved."

An excerpt from President Coolidge said:

"Our Government does not propose . . . to enter into relations with another regime which refuses to recognize the sanctity of international obligations."

Others quoted included Senators Vandenberg, of Michigan, and Barbour, of New Jersey, and Representative Fish, New York, and Tinkham, Massachusetts.

On Saturday former President Hoover said that "Mr. Roosevelt gave recognition to the Communist government by treaty and the exchange of ambassadors. That gave them standing as a decent member of the family of nations."

Federal Security Administrator McNutt, whose campaign for the Democratic nomination has assumed some appearances of New Deal sponsorship, conferred here yesterday with Frank McHale, his campaign manager; Oscar R. Ewing, New York attorney, and M. L. Fansler, chief justice of the Indiana Supreme Court.

McHale, who has completed a tour of 32 States, told McNutt that the drive for delegates to the Democratic convention "looks very encouraging." He said he was "more than satisfied" with the situation in New England, after a trip through Massachusetts, Maine, Connecticut and Rhode Island.

U. S. Is Advised To Study Reforms In Scandinavia

The greatest service American can render democracy is to kep out of war and take care of its problems at home, Dr. Ben A. Arneson, former special adviser to the Budget Bureau, said last night.

Speaking to the Washington Alumni of Ohio Wesleyan University, he said the United States has much to learn from Scandinavia in the fields of housing, unemployment insurance, collective bargaining and all forms of social security.

A visiting professor of political science at American University from 1936 to 1938, Dr. Arneson is author of a book on "The Democratic Monarchies of Scandinavia."

U. S. Finns Mark War-Torn Nation's Independence Day

Copyright, 1939, by New York Tribune, Inc.

New York, Dec. 3.—The twenty-second anniversary of Finland's independence was celebrated this afternoon by more than 1,500 men, women and children of Finnish descent who crowded into the Yorkville Casino.

They heard and sang their national music, listened to tributes to the Finnish spirit, and between the speeches talked to each other in low voices about their country's four-day-old war.

Some of them were dressed in Finnish national costume. Many of the men wore medals won in Finland's war against the Bolsheviks in 1917.

The war hung heavy over the celebration, but only intensified its Finnish spirit. In marked contrast with similar celebrations in recent years the audience tacitly elected to talk their native language even when many of them would have felt more fluent in English.

Cleveland Relief Clients Plan New Hunger March

Cleveland, Dec. 3 (AP).—A new "march" on the City Hall to seek food for 60,000 relief dependents described as "starving" was in the making tonight.

A small group of unemployed, responding to 10,000 handbills distributed at relief stations, trudged through the rain to a meeting of the Federal Workers Union and demanded the city "use all available funds, regardless of their source, to feed the people."

The council resumes work tomorrow on plans to raise $1,655,000 by issuance of $1,115,000 in bonds against anticipated collection of realty property taxes and collection of $540,000 the city claims is due from Cuyahoga County for care of indigent tubercular patients.

Maverick to Ask Directed Verdict

San Antonio, Tex., Dec. 3 (U.P.).—Mayor Maury Maverick's defense counsel planned tonight to seek an instructed verdict of not guilty without producing a witness to sustain Maverick's denial of charges that he paid poll taxes for union workers in the last city election.

District Judge Bryce Ferguson expressed doubt as the State closed its case last night that sufficient testimony had been offered, exclusive of the recounted conversations in which Maverick had no part, to support a conviction.

Pro-Finnish Mob Wrecks Reds' Hall

Communist 'Victory' Ball Halted by Riot At Aberdeen, Wash.

By the Associated Press

Aberdeen, Wash., Dec. 3.—Twenty-five persons were driven from a Communist dance hall and the three-story building partially wrecked by a crowd of 400 or 500 last night.

The raid on the hall climaxed a week of ill feeling engendered by scheduling of a Communist "victory" dance in competition with a patriotic meeting of Finnish immigrants and sympathizers.

The Finnish meeting, meanwhile, was held on schedule two blocks away, marred by no unusual incidents.

The anti-Communist crowd gathered in front of the dance building, known as "Workers Hall" or "Red Hall," an hour before the dance was to start. Men and boys began throwing stones through windows.

When the crowd advanced upon the building, those within fled through a rear door. The rioters battered down the door, pulled siding from the walls, ripped up flooring, tore out plumbing and telephones, threw radios from second-floor windows and smashed every door and window.

Pictures of Josef Stalin, Earl Browder and other Communist leaders were carried out and burned.

Aberdeen police, who at first denied any knowledge of the affair, did not appear until midnight, four hours after the rioting began, and dispersed stragglers.

Finnish leaders denied knowledge of the affair. Local Communist leaders could not be reached.

Dr. Holmstrom Commits Suicide; Leaves 3 Notes

Dr. Carl G. Holmstrom, 65, was found dead yesterday in an apartment above his own at 1604 Nineteenth street northwest. He was lying on a table, a blanket covering his head and the top of a gas stove, one jet of which was open. Dr. A. Magruder MacDonald, District coroner, issued a certificate of suicide.

Police said three notes were found, one to a son, Gustav H. Holmstrom of Chicago; one to the tenant of the apartment in which he was found, apologizing for making use of the kitchen; the third to the press. In this note, Dr. Holmstrom explained he had taken his own life because of "foul air" in the building from a heating system.

Dr. MacDonald said he was informed Dr. Holmstrom owned the building and let the apartment in which he was found. His son was notified.

Batista to Retire From Army to Run For Presidency

Habana, Cuba, Dec. 3 (AP).—The Army Press Bureau announced tonight that Col. Fulgencio Batista, chief of the army, would retire from the army Wednesday, a move which political observers believed paved the way for him to become a presidential candidate. Command of the armed forces will be turned over to Col. Jose Pedraza, supervisor of the army and chief of the national police.

President Laredo Bru today approved a measure modifying the military retirement law making it possible for Batista to retire and register in a political party.

Col. Batista has been proclaimed the presidential candidate of the Liberal and Nationalist parties and the Communist Party has announced it will name him. The elections are scheduled February 28.

League Called To Weigh Steps To Halt Soviet

Arbitration Appeal Filed by Finns; Council Will Meet Saturday

By the Associated Press

Geneva, Dec. 3.—The League of Nations today was summoned to consider an appeal from Finland for arbitration of the undeclared Finnish-Russian war.

Invoking the League's seldom-used machinery for settling international disputes, Finland demanded the League be called into session immediately as a result of the Soviet invasion.

Orders were issued by the League secretariat for the Council, guiding body of the League, to convene Saturday and for the assembly of all League members to meet December 11.

Finland's appeal asked the League to "take necessary measures to put an end to this aggression."

Russia Included in Call

Ex-Foreign Minister Rudolf Holsti, of Finland, former Stanford University professor, delivered the note to Joseph A. C. Avenol, secretary-general of the League, this morning.

It was transmitted immediately to all members including Russia, whose spokesmen in Geneva said she still was loyal to the League.

Speedy action in calling the body into session indicated a majority of members agree the League must act in the Russia-Finnish conflict.

The convocation was a complete reversal of the League's previous wartime policy of "playing dead" on political questions.

Many observers thought Russia might be willing to accept League arbitration in view of stubborn Finnish resistance and violent anti-Soviet reaction in the United States and Scandinavia.

League authorities said the Finnish demand may force Russia either to agree to arbitrate or quit the League.

Might Invoke Article 16

Holsti refused to say whether the Finns contemplated invoking Article 16. This article provides that if one of the two parties in the dispute resorts to war this shall be automatically termed an act of war against all League members who shall enact punitive economic measures against the offending state.

Both British and French leaders appeared to be supporting the Finnish appeal in what looked like an attempt to force Russia to show her hand.

Many observers saw in the Finnish appeal a chance for Britain and France to use League machinery which they have kept intact although unused in recent years.

Neutral nations, which have made it plain they would not have supported League action in the Polish-German conflict, may be mor interested in backing Finland which has been a member of the neutral bloc for a long time, observers said.

Russia May Quit League

Copenhagen, Dec. 3 (INS).—Russia plans to bolt the League of Nations unless Finland's appeal is ignored, it was asserted tonight from Riga, Latvia.

Soviet circles were quoted in these advices as stating that Russia will announce her resignation from the League as soon as the Russo-Finnish problem comes up for discussion.

Allies Study Action

Copyright by New York Times.

Paris, Dec. 31.—Finland's appeal to the League of Nations—and what to do about it—is being closely studied in Paris and London tonight.

It is felt that at a moment when world opinoin, and perhaps especially American opinion, is so strongly in sympathy with the Finns, it would be an immense error for the League, maimed and almost impotent as it is, to do nothing or seem to dodge the issue.

All the little nations of the world, and among them many South American republics, are watching with eager attention what will be done.

Here in France, too, if one may judge by newspaper headlines and comment, inaction would be regarded as a mistaken action. If the League of Nations "lets Finland down" it is indicated the repercussions will be immense.

Finns Agree Not To Bomb Civilians

upon the understanding that these same rules of warfare will be scrupulously observed by all their opponents."

The Finnish pledge complied precisely with the President's request using the exact words utilized in the American note.

Mr. Roosevelt himself included the condition "that these same rules of warfare will be scrupulously observed by all their opponents." He left the way open for retaliatory moves, also, in his Saturday call for a "moral embargo" aimed at preventing sales of American fighting planes and equipment to the Soviets.

In the latter statement he condemned "unprovoked" bombing and machine-gunning of civilian populations from the air.

Since Finland's military air strength is so slight, and there has been no charge even from the Russians that Finnish planes have bombed Russian territory, both of President Roosevelt's statements clearly were occasioned by Russian air attacks last week on Helsinki and other Finnish cities.

Finland's legation here issued a denial of Russian radio charges that Finnish troops had used poison gas. The legation made public the following communication from the government at Helsinki:

"Moscow radio charges that Finland had used poison gas against Red troops since November 13. The Finnish government denies most emphatically this detestable charge. Finland has never used and not intended to use anything else than legal implements of war. Finland is ready to submit the matter to a neutral investigation. The government is convinced that the investigation will prove the charge to be absolutely without foundation."

of Finland, which yesterday agreed to give Russia territorial concessions in a quick mutual assistance pact, and denounced the Helsinki government as composed of "reactionary beasts."

"They were always ready to fall into the power of any hostile country, including Britain," the press said.

The Communist Party newspaper Pravda declared "it was necessary to take Finland out of the orbit of influences hostile to the U. S. S. R."

Soviet offers during territorial negotiations with Finland prior to hostilities, the press asserted, would have protected the Finns. The negotiations broke down 10 days ago when Finland's representatives refused to accede to Russian demands.

All Demands Granted

The newly concluded mutual assistance pact, signed in Moscow by Otto Kuusinen as head of the "Democratic Republic of Finland" set up in opposition to the Helsinki government, granted Russia all the demands which had been made during the fruitless negotiations.

(Apparently Russia's program for Finland calls for creation of a friendly government, nominally independent and cession of some strategic territory without complete annexation by the Soviet Union.)

Summing up Soviet demands and achievements since the invasion started November 30, newspapers printed maps showing territorial changes accorded Soviet Russia by the pact with the regime announced ot the world two days ago from Moscow and quickly recognized here as the government of Finland.

These cessions included approximately 1,530 square miles of the Karelian Isthmus north of Leingrad, which Russians said would protect that "cradle of revolution" from invasion.

Russia also was accorded a 30-year lease on the Mangoe Peninsula, surrounding waters and nearby islands, guarding the entrance to the Gulf of Finland.

In addition, the pact provided for the purchase by Russia of other islands in the Gulf of Finland and parts of the Rybachi and Sredni peninsulas, on the Actic coast, near Russia's ice-free northern port, Murmansk.

In return Russia agreed to give Finland about 27,000 square miles of Soviet Karelia and pay about $2,400,000 for railways in the territory taken by the Soviet Union and $6,000,000 for territory ceded or leased.

Rebel Finns in Moscow

The Finnish Legation turned over its duties in Moscow to the Swedish legation because of the hostilities. Finnish diplomas sill were uncertain when they would be able to leave Moscow.

Pictures published in Moscow newspapers of the signing of the mutual assistance pact disclosed that leaders of the new "people's" government were not on Finnish soil but were in the Soviet capial.

Meetings of working people throughout the Soviet Union were described by the official news agency, Tass, as having given ardent approval after a broadcast of the text of the treay beween Russia and he "People's" governmen of Finland.

"Collective farmers and intellectuals welcomed this wise, noble, selfless act of the Soviet government reuniting the Karelian people with its kindred Finnish people and conributing to the securiy of he U. S. S. R. and Finland," Tass said.

stroyed" in a battle around Metsapirta, north of Lake Ladoga, in which 300 Red army men were killed and 700 taken prisoners.

Two Soviet planes were shot down near Pauso and three others were forced down, one flying the white flag, on the Karelian Isthmus, it was stated.

In a special communique the Finnish high command indignantly denied a Moscow radio allegation that Finnish forces used poison gas last Thursday, the day the Red army began marching into Finland. The communique invited a neutral mission to investigate the charge.

Italy, meanwhile, came to hard-pressed Finland's aid. Six Italian Savoia pursuit planes—first batch of an order of 25—arrived at Helsinki by steamer.

[The Associated Press said it was reported in Italian circles that 25 Italian planes had arrived with Finnish pilots.—Editor's note.]

Moscow Ignorant of Plea

It was rumored without confirmation that J. K. Paasikivi, chief of the delegation which conferred vainly in Moscow on Soviet demands on Finland, has gone to Moscow again for a parley.

(Moscow dispatches said that up to 2 p. m. nothing was known there of the Finnish inquiry.)

(The Norwegian radio, however, said Finland's note was handed to the Soviet government by the Swedish Minister yesterday afternoon.)

Meanwhile, Eljas Erkko, former foreign minister, was en route to Stockholm to replace Paasikivi as Minister to Sweden.

Premier Ryti, in a broadcast to the United States early today, said his government "is ready to negotiate the demands of Soviet Russia to the utmost limit without violating our independence or our neutrality." He gave no indication, however, that he expected Moscow to deal with his government.

Ryti reaffirmed his nation's willingness to fight for its independence, and said "I am deeply convinced that through our fight and our suffering we have been fostering a better world."

50 Americans Leave

Only about 50 Americans took advantage of buses furnished by the United States legation and left for Abo, although there are nearly 1,000 Americans living in southern Finland. The small number evacuated was due, the legation said, to the suddenness of the emergency, travel difficulties and the fact many of the Americans were married to Finns and refused to leave their families.

The defense ministry reported 85 persons were killed and 182 wounded by Soviet air raids during the last four days on Helsinki, Hange, Viborg, Lachtis and Petsamo. The heaviest toll was in Helsinki where 65 persons were killed, 160 wounded, 26 buildings destroyed and 233 houses and public buildings damaged by air bombs.

Eleven persons were killed and five wounded in Viborg, three killed and two wounded in Hange and six killed and 14 wounded in Lachtis, where many buildings were struck.

One casualty was reported from Petsamo in the north.

The defense ministry reported 24 Russian planes shot down Saturday, mostly in the South of Finland, and 36 Russian tanks captured or disabled.

Claim Islands Taken

Soviet naval action has been directed mostly against Finland's four undefended islands in the eastern end of the gulf of Finland—Hogland, Tytarsaari, Lavansaari and Seiskari.

(A Soviet war communique early today reported the capture of the islands).

The islands were said to have been heavily shelled by Soviet warships.

On the Karelian Isthmus, the defense ministry said, "the attacks are against the fortifications along the frontier between Ino and Rasuki."

Large concentrations of Soviet warships were reported massing in the eastern Baltic for a third and bigger naval attack on Hangoe, possibly Monday.

Cruiser Reported Damaged

Soviet naval squadrons unsuccessfully attacked Hangoe's powerful forts Friday and Saturday night. It was reported the 8,500-ton Soviet cruiser Kirov, which the Finns claim to have crippled in Friday's ship-shore engagement, had gone to the Estonian port of Tallinn for repairs.

The new Finnish cabinet was moving out of Helsinki for a new government seat, the name of which was kept secret but which was believed to be the western port of Vasa on the Gulf of Bothnia.

The Finnish government officially expressed to the American legation its gratitude for President Roosevelt's moves in connection with the Russo-Finnish conflict, including his "moral embargo" against the U. S. S. R. The American Red Cross presented the Finnish Red Cross with a cash gift of $10,000.

On the Karelian front north and south of Lake Ladoga fighting was particularly heavy at Suojarvi and on the Karelian isthmus between Soviet-occupied Terijoki and Koivisto. The southern section of the Mannerheim line was withstanding repeated Soviet mechanized attacks from Koivisto northward to Kexholm on Lake Ladoga's western shore.

In this sector the Finnish troops retreated from outpost positions under heavy Soviet artillery barrages. As they withdrew, they laid numerous tank traps and mined strategic roads and bridges. Then they took up positions at the in bulwarks of the Mannerheim line.

The fighting both on the isthmus and north of Lake Ladoga continued unabated through the night. Many Soviet tanks were destroyed, the number estimated at more than 60 since the invasion began Thursday.

The Finns alleged the Soviet air force is utilizing women flyers in its attacks on Finnish towns. It was stated the body of one Soviet pilot, whose plane was shot down, was found to be that of a woman.

Finns Thwart Sea Attack On Petsamo

200 Reds Parachute Into Death Trap in Mountains, Norse Say

By the Associated Press

Kirkenes, Norway, Dec. 3.—Soviet troops attempting to recapture Petsamo by an attack from the Arctic Ocean today were reported thrown back.

Reports here, near the scene of operations, said the Red troops advanced in several ships from Aleksandrovsk on Kola Bay and pushed up Petsamo Fjord but were repulsed when they attempted to land.

Petsamo, 200 miles north of the Arctic Circle and Finland's only outlet to the Arctic Ocean, was captured by the Russians in the first day of the Soviet-Finnish war, but was retaken by Finnish troops who marched through deep snow to counterattack.

200 Parachute to Death

Svanvik, Norway, Dec. 3 (U.P.).—Two hundred Russian soldiers were reported tonight to have parachuted into a death trap behind the Finnish lines in the Nickel Mountains.

The Red troops appeared near Salmijaervi soon after six large Soviet planes flew overhead. They were surrounded quickly and their surrender was expected momentarily.

Antiaircraft shells shot down one of the Russian planes, but the other five escaped, it was said.

Meantime, cannonading audible on the Norwegian-Finnish frontier indicated Russian and Finnish troops still were locked in a desperate battle for possession of Petsamo.

The bombardment first was heard when the Soviets launched a counter-attack last night after having been driven from the Finnish port with a loss of 150 prisoners.

(A Moscow communique last night reported Russian troops had captured Petsamo a second time.)

Refugees Pour Across Border

Anticipating a counter-attack, the Finns spent most of yesterday establishing machine-gun posts in ruined buildings and mounting antitank guns.

Finnish refugees still were pouring across the border despite 14-below zero weather. Scores of babies were among them. Some were carried in the arms of their mothers, others sat on laps and some were carried papoose-like on mothers' shoulders or backs.

These refugees told of three days of terror and warfare that left Finnish villages in ruins. The Finnish army was taking in volunteers by the scores, they said, and appeared to have thwarted, at least temporarily, an apparent Russian plan to launch a drive southward through the middle of Finland.

Shortness of daylight and unfavorable weather were said to have hampered the Red air fleet.

Navy Weighs Blimp Patrol Along Coasts

11 Stations Under Study as Bases for Lighter-Than-Air Craft

The Navy high command was reported last night to be giving serious consideration to locations for establishing 11 strategic blimp patrol stations around the coasts and insular possessions.

Stations proposed reportedly include Brooklyn, Providence, Miami, New Orleans, San Diego, San Francisco, Seattle, the Canal Zone, Southeastern Alaska, Hawaii and Puerto Rico.

Blimp patrols in these locations, it was believed, would help safeguard all coasts of continental United States, as well as outlying territories against unexpected attack by sea.

The 11 discussed sites are key points in many of which strong Naval facilities already exist.

Vinson to Urge Air Funds

Conferences producing expressions of Naval consideration of these sites followed the announcement by Chairman Vinson of the House Naval Affairs Committee that he would ask the coming session of Congress to authorize a powerful naval air fleet including 36 lighter-than-air ships, mostly blimps.

Navy strategists are according this branch of aviation renewed interest in the light of European war developments, and in recognition of the all-around efficiency and economy of operations.

Acting Secretary Charles Edison, in his annual report to President Roosevelt calling attention to the "ever-increasing importance" of naval aviation, revealed that "a moderate program of lighter-than-air activities has been continued."

A fundamental reason blocking earlier large-scale use of airships has been a shortage of trained personnel. Edison's chief suggestion to the President last week was for a 15 per cent increase in Navy personnel to staff the exanding fleet.

Reserve May Be Trained

In such a program, it was believed, provision might be made to train pilots in the Naval Reserve.

A Navy board, it was learned, has received an urgent recommendation to take steps in this direction, with the reminder that only a few men, at the Lakehurst, N. J., air station and in the airship industry, are prepared to handle lighter-than-air craft.

Much of the unfortunate history of this branch of aviation was attributed to unschooled crews.

Recent demonstrations off the Jersey coast have shown that new blimps can anchor and refuel independently at sea.

School to Get Land

The Montgomery County Board of Education has given formal notice of intention to purchase land adjoining the Gaithersburg High School property as a site for a gymnasium and auditorium building. The lot contains approximately three-fourths of an acre and the price to be paid the owner, Miss Mary A. Hutton, is $4,000.

Nazi Pilot, Socked by D. C. Man in 'Scrap,' Has Embassy Protest to State Department

Riedel, Glider Ace, Parked His Car in American's Garden

An Armistice day fight between a Washington auto mechanic and a German air attache will have its sequel before Assistant District Attorney Karl Kindleberger today as a result of diplomatic representations by the German Embassy.

The fight, which Peter Riedel, champion Nazi glider pilot, lost by a knokout to 130-pound Frank Werner, became an "international incident" several days ago when Hans Thomsen, counselor of the German Embassy, filed "formal notification" of the brawl with the State Department and asked "what steps have been taken" by the United States Government.

The State Department, the Post learned, turned the German protest over to the Department of Justice and Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police. No warrant having been sworn out, police could make no arrest, and instead, asked Riedel and Werner, who lives at 3303 Tenth street northeast, to appear at the District Attorney's office at 11 p. m. today.

Werner, 35, who told The Post yesterday that he "used to belong to a boxing club in Pittsburgh," said that he pummeled Riedel and knocked him down after the German parked his car in the Werner back-yard flower garden. The car was parked in the garden an hour later when Policeman Otho Blackwell, of Twelfth Precinct, arrived, the policeman said.

Riedel, tall, wiry glider pilot, who broke all American soaring records a year ago by flying a motorless plane 225 miles from Elmira, N. Y., to Washington, ran into the Werner kitchen after getting up from the ground, Mrs. Werner said, and asked for a telephone.

"I asked him if he wanted to wash his face," Mrs. Werner said, "because his eyes were red and almost closed. But he said, 'No, give me a telephone, a telephone. I want to call the police.' So I said, 'Not for my husband, you don't.'

"I told him that in Germany they'd stand him against a wall and shoot him for making less trouble than that. Then he asked for a mirror, and I handed him one, and he looked at his face and said, 'My eyes, my eyes, I can't see almost.'

"Then he yelled, 'The German Embassy will take care of you,' and he rushed out."

Riedel phoned police from the next-door home of the Rev. Paul Schulte, the "flying priest," with whom he was visiting, and Blackwell advised him to move his car out of the garden and apply for a warrant. According to Kindleberger, a warrant was not requested. The diplomatic protest came instead.

"It was just a plain American scrap to me," Werner said yesterday. "I thought he'd forget about it, especially after Father Schulte's assistant apologized for the trouble and gave us four silver crosses the other day."

Attack on Finns Disrupting Nazi Party in Hungary

Copyright by New York Times.

Budapest, Dec. 3.—Russia's invasion of Finland has intensified the growing weakness of the Hungarian National Socialist Party—Magyar offshoot of the German Nazis—and there are many who believe that this green-shirted version of Hitlerism is now on its last legs.

Although in the national elections of last June the Hungarian Nazis showed unexpected strength, and were said in some quarters to have the backing of almost half the country—a fact disguised by the complicated electoral laws—the party has been seriously split during the past three months and now numbers seven dwindling factions.

The members are said to be deserting wholesale. The circulation of the party paper, Magyarsag, has fallen off considerably. Many former Nazis are seeking membership in the Social Democratic Party, which is leery of amitting them because of the Berlin-Moscow tie-up.

Finn Premier Phones Appeal For Medical Supplies to U. S.

By Risto Ryti
Premier of Finland.

Helsinki, by telephone to New York, Dec. 3 (U.P.).—We are very happy in Helsinki tonight because a severe snowstorm has suspended all aviation activity and the Russian air force has been unable throughout the day to resume its attacks upon the city.

We also are highly pleased with the resistance of our Finnish soldiers and the enemy has been held in check on the Karelian front to the south.

The Russian charges that our soldiers are using poisonous gas do not surprise us. There is reason to believe that the Russians have invented that charge because they themselves plan to use poisonous gas against the Finns.

The evacuation of Helsinki and other large cities has been proceeding in orderly fashion throughout today. More than 100,000 women and children and the sick and aged already have left.

Our most acute need now is for all kinds of medical supplies—bandages, vaccines and all Red Crossmaterials.

We are able to get other supplies, materials and even money from our neighboring states.

Americas Sounded On Protest to Russia

Montevideo, Dec. 3 (AP).—An authoritative source said tonight Uruguay's foreign minister, Alberto Guani, was communicating with foreign offices of the Pan American Union for their views regarding Russian aggression against Finland in order to make a joint declaration against the invasion.

Soviet Press Grows Lyrical In War Stories

Writer Tells of Troops Cheering as They Charge Finns

By G. E. R. Gedye
Copyright by New York Times.

Moscow, Dec. 3.—After considerable delay a picture of Soviet military action against the Finns has been provided by Pravda, which published an account of the situation at the front by Nikolai Virta, well-known Soviet playwright.

The article covers the "first three hours" of hostilities. According to the writer the procedure was that after Premier Molotoff's speech of the night of November 29 "it became known" that more provocations had taken place. Then on the morning of November 30 orders were received from Leningrad for the violation of the Finnish border, which promptly followed.

In the account published by Pravda, there is no suggestion of any declaration of war—merely the statement that the "Red Army units had been ordered to cross the border and crush the Finnish troops."

Sky a Sheet of Flame

The Red army headquarters was moved forward to within 3 kilometers of the frontier, then at three minutes of 8 the troops stood on the qui vive awaiting zero hour.

"On the stroke of 8 a. m. the signal was flashed, from the south the air was suddenly filled with the whistle of shells, the echo of their detonation, and the deeper boom of howitzers muffled with the roar of the heavies.

"From the Kronstadt one heard the distant echo of the great fortress guns.

"Thirty seconds later the horizon became a sheet of flame. The whole Finnish frontier was ablaze. Then began the battle of the machine guns, answered by those of the Finns. The cannonade continued for 30 minutes along the front of 140 kilometers and 18 kilometers deep.

"Then green rockets were shot up, signaling the Red infantry to attack. The Red troops charged, cheering, to the frontier. Plunging in icy waters of a river, they started to work erecting pontoon bridges. At 9:15 a. m. sections of the first battalion crossed the frontier over the bridges and entered Finnish territory."

The writer says that the Finns released chloro picrine gas, but as no such allegation is contained in any official Soviet communique, it may perhaps be considered the imaginative contribution of a dramatist.

Another picture is given by two writers, apparently farther north, describing an attack through Finnish forests.

"Forests so silent an hour ago, before the attack, were suddenly filled with roaring motors of tanks, the clank of caterpillar links and the sirens of machines along snow-covered roads. The enemy resisted with determination.

Advance Difficult

"When it retreated, the enemy left behind hundreds mines and booby traps, covered by a layer of hay and snow. Across roads were stretched treacherous threads of wires connected to explosives. Open a door, cross a threshold, set foot on a bridge and you detonate one of these dangerous traps," the writer said.

"The mopping up of sniper's nests, camouflaged mines, and traps rendered the advance of our forces somewhat difficult."

The opening of the air assault on Finland was described by N. Michaloviky, who related how air force leaders were summoned at 6 a. m. "to express their determination to crush the enemy." At the first sign of dawn the bombers moved off for Finland.

"Below was an engineering works. As panic began on the ground our Voroshiloff kilograms crashed down on the heads of our enemies. Our aim was better than good. In a few seconds the entire plant was blown into the air. Heavy black smoke heaps of ruins were all that was left of the enemy structures.

"After it was over, the antiaircraft artillery began to operate and hostile pursuit planes appeared, but it was already too late. All our planes returned safely in perfect formation," this panegyrist claimed.

Schoolboy, 13, Develops Air Bomb for Britain

Copyright by New York Times.

London, Dec. 3.—A new type of aerial bomb, conceived by a 13-year-old school boy, whose teachers declare to be a mechanical genius, is under serious consideration by the experts of the ministry of supply.

The boy inventor, John Clough, developed the weapon in his spare time.

The weapon has already passed preliminary inspection by one section of the Department of Scientific Industrial Research, attached to the Ministry of Supply.

When intervied today, young Clough said, "I got the idea for the bomb during the summer holidays, and worked out the details while I was in sick bay with a chill at school this term.

"The other boys helped me get out the design which was sent to the Supply Ministry in London a fortnight ago. This is the first time since then I have thought about bombs. Previously, I have been more interested in building model railway engines."

Xenophon's Grave Believed Found

Rome, Dec. 3 (INS).—The long-lost grave of Xenophon, one of the greatest historians and philosophers of antiquity, was believed to have been discovered today, according to an Athens dispatch carried in the Italian newspaper Popolo di Roma.

The grave was said to have been discovered at Skilunta, near Mount Olympus in Greece. Archeologists said it was highly probable the grave contained the remains of the famous Greek writer.

Too Nervous to Sleep, German Refugees Huddle in Corridors

Grim Faces Turn to Laughter as Ship Nears New York After Passing Through Gale-Tossed Convoy Lanes of Midocean

By Fred Vanderschmidt
Associated Press Staff Writer

New York, Dec. 3.—A ten-day voyage through mine-infested waters gives a deck view of the British blockade and patrol of the North Atlantic.

With 900 Jewish refugees, largest single group to reach here since the war started, and other passengers, I arrived on the Netherlands liner Rotterdam.

Grim faces turned to laughter as the liner neared her destination after passing through the treacherous North Sea mine fields, the British "Downs" and the gale-tossed convoy lanes of mid-Atlantic.

We slipped out of Rotterdam before dawn, a blaze of neutral light in a blacked-out sea. Capt. Thomas Stuut took us through the wild mines of the North Sea and English Channel, graveyard of thousands of tons of neutral merchantmen.

Too nervous to sleep, the refugees huddled in corridors or picked their way fearfully around the decks, strewn with coiled rope ready for launching uncovered lifeboats.

Daylight brought the dark shadows of British minesweepers and the drone of a bomber, swooping low to scan the tall letters "Holland" on our sides.

The Rotterdam cleared the "Downs" in the night, but through the next day British mine sweepers and destroyers stole past us in the mist.

Six days out, and not a glimpse of anything but British or neutral shipping. A line of ten vessels steamed past eastbound, convoyed by cruiser and destroyers.

Two refugees were dead and most of them had been ill by the time we reached New York.

Ruthie Kirchen, 19-year-old Viennese, sang a gay song in a half dozen languages in the crowded lounge, although she had been up all night before helping the ship's doctor.

A Vienna physician who had been taking pills to induce sleep said with a smile:

"Now it will be better."

Typhoon Roars Toward Manila, Wrecks 5 Isles

By the Associated Press

Manila, (Monday) Dec. 4.—A typhoon, described by meteorologists as the worst in the Philippines since 1908, moved swiftly toward Manila today after ravaging five islands to the southwest.

Seven provinces and scores of towns were completely isolated, communication facilities to the southwest were so badly crippled it was impossible to get any information on property damage or loss of life. Authorities said it might be a week or more before a complete check could be made.

The storm, which swept in upon northern Mindanao Island from the South Pacific early Saturday, was expected to strike close to Manila about noon today. Barometer readings in the path of the storm were reported as low as 730 millemeters. Wind velocity was upwards of 75 miles an hour.

Brief messages from the storm area reported two fishing boats had been sunk and many small boats grounded. Public works projects were destroyed and field crop damage was estimated as high as 90 per cent in some areas. A terrific tropical rain and resulting floods caused much damage.

The Red Cross sent doctors to Samar rovince yesterday and food, clothing and funds were being assembled for relief.

At Manila all United States Navy craft were moved to deep water. All sailors on shore leaves were summoned from motion picture theaters and other amusement places by radio last night.

Maj. Granger, Noted Architect, Is Dead at 72

Special Dispatch to The Post

Roxbury, Conn., Dec. 3.—Maj. Alfred Hoyt Granger, 72, noted architect, who designed the La Salle street station in Chicago, died at his home, Few Acres, early today of a heart attack.

Maj. Granger, who planned many Chicago structures, also was the architect of the hospital building of the Soldiers Home in Washington.

He was the author of "Life of Charles Follen McKim," "England's World Empire," "Chicago Welcomes You" and "Spirit of Vienna."

Maj. Granger was born in Zanesville, Ohio, the son of Judge Moses Moorhead and Mary Hoyt Reese Granger. A great nephew of Gen. William T. Sherman and of John Sherman, Secretary of State in the Cabinet of William McKinley, Maj. Granger passed much time as a youth in their company.

He served as a captain of engineers in the World War, and as commanding officer of Company C, Seventy-eighth Engineers, at Camp Humphreys, Va. His clubs included the Cosmos of Washington and the Century of New York.

Surviving are his wife, the former Miss Belle Hughitt, and three daughters, Mrs. Elizabeth G. Brown, of New York; Mrs. Chester D. Shepard, of Menasha, Wis., and Mrs. Arthur Krock, of Washington.

Nazis Sold Out Finns, British Say

gested in April that Britain, France and Russia should sign a mutual assistance pact and that Britain and France should guarantee all the Baltic states against aggression.

Because the Baltic states did not want to be guaranteed and because Poland and Rumania, whom Britain and France had guaranteed, did not want Russian troops on their soil, Britain and France proposed, since Russia had stated her willingness to help stop German aggression, she should support Britain and France in the event that they had to go to war to save Poland or Rumania. These proposads were rejected by the Russians.

Conceded Point

The British and French then changed their proposals to remove the Russian objection, and on July 1 Britain and France met in substance the Russian demand that all three powers should guarantee the Baltic states. This was accepted by Russia two days later, but negotiations dragged out while Russia demanded the right to take action in the Baltic states in the event of "indirect aggression," which the British and French were unwilling to support.

On the last day of July, with the negotiations at this stage, the British and French agreed to military talks before political negotiations were completed. A few days later Germany and Russia announced the intention of signing a pact of non-aggression.

What the British want to know now is whether the Russo-German plan does not include much more than Finland. What about Norway and Sweden, they ask? It is noticed here that the German radio tonight began railing against Sweden for its pro-British foreign policy.

It is also remembered that Russia has long dreamed of a country extending from the Pacific to the Atlantic and nobody would be surprised if the Russian troops kept marching across Norway until they reached the Atlantic after the Finnish campaign is over.

Listen to God, Pastors Urge 100,000,000

Only the Spirit Can Save World, Says Dr. McCartney

The "sword of the spirit" is the only weapon capable of stopping the threatened destruction of civilization, Dr. Albert J. McCartney, pastor of Covenant-First Presbyterian Church, declared yesterday, as Washington churches joined in a world-wide appeal for "one hundred million people to listen to God" during the week-end.

Moral-rearmament week-end, during which the world's religious leaders called upon millions to bolster their spiritual defenses, also was commemorated locally.

Dr. McCartney told his hearers at the Covenant-First Presbyterian Church that it "looks as if civilization was about to break up," and went on to declare that "Mr. (Herbert) Hoover put the whole story in a single phrase last week when he commented that in Russia's attack upon Finland civilization has reached a new low."

"Reaping the Whirlwind"

"What we are witnessing all about us is nothing but the lain logic of events," declared the cleric. "For fifty years we have sown to the wind and now we are reaping the whirlwind."

"We have reared a generation that out in the world is utterly without the knowledge of God, and within the church a generation that is spiritually and intellectually vapid,—a generation that does not understand the judgments of God in history," he continued.

The pastor was among the members of the committee of local religious leaders urging observance of the "week-end." Others were Dr. Edward H. Pruden, First Baptist pastor and president of the Washington Federation of Churches; Dr. Howard Stone Anderson, First Congregational Church; Dr. Frederick Brown Harris, Foundry Methodist, and Dr. Harry W. Burgan, Hamline Methodist Church.

Also Dr. Oscar F. Blackwelder, Reformation Lutheran Church; Dr. Raphael H. Miller, National City Christian; Dr. Oliver J. Hart, St. John's Episcopal, Lafayette Square; Dr. W. S. Abernethy, Calvary Baptist Church, and Dr. W. L. Darby, executive secretary of the Washington Federation of Churches.

Addressing a congregation which also included delegates to the annual Tri-State Older Boys' Conference, Dr. Blackwelder said it was not safe to live in world like this unless you have heard God's voice.

Dr. Pruden, who observed the third anniversary of his local pastorate, expressed the opinion that "our world shows the effect of not listening to God—in the international situation, in the confusion, and in the stress on material might and power."

The present danger is that we shall listen too much to the voices of the secularized world, in which God does not count, Dr. Hart told his parishioners.

Italy to Oppose Russia in Balkans

tions of Europe, especially Rumania.

"The plan arranged between Hitler and Stalin, according to Berne reports, is that Germany will lay hands to the principal part of Rumanian territory, though Russia will take Bessarabia, while Transylvania will be ceded to Hungary," the dispatch said.

"The alleged advantage of this plan is that only Rumania would be sacrificed, while the other Balkan states would be left in peace. The haste with which the attack was made on Finland is explained by Russia's desire to liquidate Baltic questions as soon as possible in order to have her hands free to deal with developments in the Balkans."

The almost unanimous prediction in the Italian press that, after disposing of the Finnish question, Russia will turn her attention to the Balkans was echoed in the authoritative Informazioni del Giorno.

The bulletin emphasized there was danger of future Soviet action in the Balkans, where countries desiring to remain neutral were described as more reluctant than ever to make rapprochement for peace, fearing it might be misconstrued.

The Regime Fascista saw grave danger for England should Russia extend her influence in Scandinavia, since if Norway ceded ports to Russia, Germany would make similar demands and win submarine bases nearer the British Isles.

Headlines in the Corriere Della Sera told of "combined Russo-German action against India."

All the newspapers in dispatches from Helsinki unanimously praise the valor of the Finns and take pains to emphasize the scant results obtained by the Soviet army despite its overwhelming superiority on land, on sea and in the air.

LaGuardia Tangles With Used Gum

New York, Dec. 3 (AP).—Mayor LaGuardia got all tangled up today in the used chewing-gum problem.

He revealed a campaign for the proper disposition of second-hand—but unfortunately not worn out—gum, saying "it costs New York City hundreds of thousands of dollars yearly to remove it from parks, streets and public places."

So LaGuardia asked various gum companies to help by printing on wrappers a suggestion the paper be kept for disposal of the gum. Several companies have agreed, he said.

Duchess of Argyll Was the Eldest of 3 Surviving Children

By the United Press

London, Dec. 3.—Princess Louise, Duchess of Argyle, oldest surviving child of Queen Victoria, died peacefully today at the age of 91. She had been ill for several months.

Childless, she lived alone except for servants in Kensington Palace, the recognized official home of the sovereign's "unattached" relatives. She received a state pension of £6,000 a year (now about $24,000) as a child of the sovereign. It lapsed with her death.

When war broke out in September, Princess Louise refused to leave London. No sandbags were piled around Kensington Palace and the windows were not even taped.

An old underground passage was available as a bomb shelter. The sole concession she made to the threat of air raids was to put up the same dark blue window blinds she used during the World War.

The princess, great-aunt of King George VI, despite her unconventionality in younger years, meticulously upheld the dignity of the crown. The most unusual thing she ever did, one which made the British public love her all her life, was to fall in love with a handsome young commoner, marry him and live happily with him for 40 years. She was the first British princess to marry outside of royalty.

He was the Marquess of Lorne, later the 9th Duke of Argyle, who died in 1914. Seldom during their married life did they appear at court or royal functions. Most of their time they spent at their home on the banks of the Clyde, or in traveling. They lived in Canada while the duke was governor general. When over 80, the princess revealed that the strictness of the atmosphere of Queen Victoria's household irked her as a child. At an impromptu speech she said: "Luckily the habit of molding all children in the same pattern has gone out of fashion. It was deplorable. I know, because I suffered from it."

Two other children of Queen Victoria survive. They are Princess Beatrice, 82, widow of Prince Henry of Battenberg, and the Duke of Connaught, 89.

British Raid Nazi Base at Helgoland

A further development in the war on German submarines, against which the British claim to have the whip hand, was the announcement that "a number of U-boat prisoners" had been landed at a Scottish port as the result of recent naval operations.

The 7,030-ton French steamer Floride struck a mine today but was beached near an unidentified French port. Two persons were killed.

The Swedish freighter, Rudolph, bound from Hartlepool to Malmo with a cargo of coal, was sunk by a mine or a submarine off the British coast early today. The crew of 33 put off in lifeboats and 15 were believed to have been rescued.

The Helgoland raid was the first reported by the British since November 28, when the Air Ministry said three German "mine laying seaplanes" at their base in Borkum were machine-gunned by RAF planes.

Royal Air Force units attacked the German fleet off the Helgoland September 29. The German high command said "five or six" British planes were shot down in this encounter.

Britain's navy is under orders to start imposing a blockade tomorraw against all German exports, which Britain hopes will strangle her sources of foreign exchange.

The measure calls for seizure of goods either of German origin or ownership, even if carried in neutral vessels, and is being instituted despite protests from Belgium, Japan, Italy, Sweden and the Netherlands.

Nazis Deny British Version

Berlin, Dec. 3 (INS).—The German high command tonight claimed a violent British mass air raid against the Reich's vital Helgoland Island base was repulsed by antiaircraft fire, but admitted that the raiders' bombs sank a fishing trawler and otherwise wrought "minor damage."

An official communique stated:

"British bombing planes on Sunday at noon unsuccessfully attemped to attack the Island of Helgoland.

"Due to heavy antiaircraft fire, the enemy planes were able to drop only a few bombs, causi g minor damage. One fishing boat was sunk."

German military quarters acknowledged that the British raid was a daring feat, but added all such attempts are "futile," in view of the formidable defenses of Germany's North Sea island outpost.

It was declared that Helgoland's fortifications—built on solid rock—were stronger than the World War fortifications dismantled under the Versailles Treaty.

Allies Clarify Blockade

Paris, Dec. 3 (U.P.).—French informants said tonight Britain and France have advised neutrals that they intend to work out a system for application of their embargo on German exports which will avoid depriving neutral nations of any "vital" imports from the Reich.

Concessions will be made on German coal shipments by sea to Italy and shipments of German machinery and equipment to Japan.

Football Peps Up Westwall Doldrums

By G. H. Archambault
Copyright by New York Times.

Paris, Dec. 3.—It is three months today since France and Britain proclaimed that a "state of war" existed between themselves and Germany. The "state of war" continues but it can scarcely be said that the war has begun.

Were it not for the tragic reminder each day in the dead and wounded men, the operations might be described as exercises under field conditions—with live ammunition, but also with canteens, football games, and short-leave.

Those conditions still obtain between the Rhine and the Moselle—a front of 120 miles. But a very definite trend is developing here to stress that those 120 miles represent a very small part of Europe. It is also recalled that it is not the form of war that counts, but it is the result.

These three months have proved that war can be waged on diplomatic, economic and other fields, as well as the military. Force of circumstances, in the case of the Germans—once the idea of a lightning stroke in the west was abandoned—and a deliberate purpose in the case of the Allies, prompted them to rest on the Westwall and the Maginot Line, respectively, neither side refusing battle, but neither side seeking it.

In a sense it is a stalemate, but behind each line preparations for war are proceeding not only in strengthening fortifications, but in training troops for action at some future time—and not necessarily between the Rhine and the Moselle rivers.

Tokyo Foreign Chief Calls In U. S. Envoy

Conference Today Expected to Explore Trade Relations

By the United Press

Tokyo (Monday), Dec. 4.—United States Ambassador Joseph C. Grew will confer with Foreign Minister Admiral Nomura this afternoon at the Foreign Minister's request.

The meeting will be the second between the Ambassador and the Foreign Minister since President Roosevelt abrogated the U. S.-Japan commercial treaty effective January 26, 1940.

It was believed this question would be discussed today as Japan fears a "no treaty" period after the commercial agreement expires might place a dangerous strain on relations between the two powers.

Speed Russo-Japanese Pact

Soviet Premier Molotoff and the Japanese Ambassador to Russia, Shigenoru Togo, have reached an agreement in Moscow for the speedy conclusion of a Russo-Japanese trade treaty, the newspaper Asahi Shimbun said today.

The agreement, signing of which is expected soon, most likely will be adapted to the economic mobilization now going on in Japan, the newspaper stated.

The press in general expressed the belief the proposed Russian treaty would be a decisive step for the future of political relations between the two countries.

[Vital progress in negotiations between Russia and Japan on trade and other undisclosed problems was reported today after a conference at the Soviet Foreign Office, the Associated Press said in a Moscow dispatch.

[Although trade matters were said to have been under discussion, it was learned from a reliable source that other problems have been injected into the negotiations.—Editor's note.]

Soldiers Are Worried

Copyright by New York Times

Tokyo, Dec. 3.—Prompted by the fact that Japanese soldiers at the front in China are worrying about their homes in the drought-stricken areas where the rice crop has partly failed, Gen. Juzo Nishio, commander in chief in China, has shipped 80,000 bushels of rice from China.

The rice arrived at Osaka today for distribution in the rural areas where the scarcity is worst.

As winter opens the Japanese people are experiencing a growing stringency of necessaries coupled with a greater abundance of money than at any time since the fighting in China began. Though it nowhere approaches famine conditions, the scarcity is sufficiently widespread to have become the most common subject of conversation.

Since prices were prohibited from rising by imperial ordinance on October 18 they have gone up 5 per cent. Prices of food, fuel, clothing and lighting in cities have risen 91 per cent since the war in China began, according to indices of the newspaper Osahi.

CHILDREN'S Frequent COLDS
For relieving discomforts of chest colds and night coughs, rub VapoRub on throat, chest, and back at bedtime. VapoRub's poultice-vapor action relieves congestion of upper air passages—eases soreness of chest and back muscles—helps the youngster relax into healing sleep.
For coughing and irritated throat caused by colds, put VapoRub on the child's tongue to relieve the irritation. Then massage VapoRub on throat and chest.
For "sniffles" and misery of head colds, melt VapoRub in a bowl of boiling water. Have the child breathe in the steaming vapors. This loosens phlegm, clears air passages, makes breathing easier. Also massage VapoRub on throat and chest. Millions of families use these three time-tested treatments.

The Italian Reaction

The anti-Soviet and pro-Finnish demonstrations in Rome last Saturday provide a valuable clew to the present drift of Italian foreign policy.

These demonstrations are said to have been spontaneous. Maybe they were. At least it is certain that they would never have been allowed to take place without the tacit approval of the regime. Together with the growing volume of anti-Russian comment in the Fascist press, these demonstrations suggest that, unlike Germany, Italy is not prepared to excuse or condone the Soviet invasion of Finland.

The Russo-Finnish crisis has thus driven an additional wedge between the partners of the erstwhile Berlin-Rome axis. Although Germany has been at war since September 1 and Italy has remained neutral, the two nations are still outwardly on the friendliest terms. No word of criticism of Hitler or the Third Reich is allowed to appear in the Italian press. On the other hand, the tone of official comment regarding the Allies has been unfailingly critical since hostilities broke out in Europe, even as before.

The fact remains, however, that Germany today is tied to Russia's chariot wheel. That is why the Nazi press finds it necessary to justify a development so full of potential danger to the Third Reich as the Russian attack on Finland. It is also a safe guess that, should Russia follow up her aggressions in the Baltic area by a thrust into the Balkans, Berlin would find it the counsel of wisdom to approve that, too. Indeed, there is a strong possibility that a drive in the Balkans would be a joint enterprise of Russia and Germany.

Such a drive, or even a conquest by Russia alone, would certainly not be to Italy's advantage. Rome has always regarded the Balkans as an important Italian sphere of interest. This is particularly true today with Albania forming part of the Italian empire. A disturbance of the Balkan balance of power by Russia or by Russia and Germany in combination could hardly be viewed by Mussolini as anything less than a threat to the Fascist kingdom.

It is no wonder, then, that Stalin's flattering imitation of the tactics used by Mussolini in Ethiopia, Spain and Albania finds the Duce anything but pleased.

A Shorter Campaign?

There is no doubt that Presidential campaigns in the United States consume far more time than do similar political contests in any other democratic nation.

According to the time-honored custom, such campaigns begin with the national conventions in June when the standard bearers are chosen and the party platforms are adopted. During the summer months electioneering drags along at reduced speed and does not get well under way until after Labor Day. In all, approximately four and a half months are consumed in this process.

On theoretical grounds, therefore, as Senator Vandenberg suggests, a case can be made for an abbreviated campaign which would undoubtedly save the parties money and reduce the wear and tear on the candidates' nerves—not to mention the voters'. It must be pointed out, however, that the disadvantages of a long campaign are more than offset, particularly from the viewpoint of the party out of power, by its advantages.

The major parties do not always nominate Presidential candidates who are well known to every section of this far-flung country. The people need time to get acquainted with those seeking the highest and most powerful office in the land. And, while the prolonged political debate to which voters are subjected every fourth year may be tedious to some, it serves the invaluable function of educating the public as to the issues facing the Nation.

Nor is there much point in the argument that little could be accomplished during the early months of a campaign at a time of international crisis. There is an undoubted need for unity and an absence of excessive partisanship on problems of foreign policy in times like these. But this does not mean that all discussion of differences, whether on domestic or foreign issues, should be suspended during a Presidential campaign year because there happens to be such a crisis.

According to John Hamilton, chairman of the Republican National Committee, the suggestion emanating from Warm Springs that next year's Presidential campaign be shortened was previously "projected" by the G. O. P. But the Republican Convention, he asserts, will be held at the convenience of that party and not at the suggestion of Mr. Roosevelt. Others besides Senator Vandenberg will wonder whether the Warm Springs proposal was not a "clever maneuver" to undermine the tradition that the party in power should be the first to meet in convention.

A Self-Inflicted Blow

The European war has drawn the nations of the Western Hemisphere closer together politically and stimulated their desire for more extensive trade with one another. What is needed is a gradual strengthening of commercial ties rather than opportunistic gains due to the temporary dislocations of war.

The most promising way of promoting these mutual interests is the employment of our surplus capital to develop the rich natural resources of the countries to the south of us. By assisting them to produce a greater and more varied assortment of goods, we could increase their purchasing power and provide a broader basis for exchange of commodities in foreign trade.

No doubt Dr. Fuchs, financial adviser to the Peruvian delegation at the recent Panama conference, had this thought in mind when discussing various proposals for improving commercial relations among the American republics. "The maximum cooperation and solidarity could be reached," he said, "if the ultimate creditor nation (that is, the United States) agrees to invest her favorable balance in a debtor nation, developing its natural resources."

It is rather ironical that this suggestion should be made public coincident with the announcement that Mexico's Supreme Court has set the seal of final approval upon the rape of foreign-owned oil properties. This word is used advisedly. Mexico is obviously in no position to make adequate compensation for properties estimated to be worth $400,000,000. In approving an agreement which permits payments to be deferred for ten years, the Mexican judges are merely adding insult to injury, for the very practical purpose of camouflaging an act of virtual confiscation.

Such treatment runs counter to every canon of fair play, and violates customary procedure in cases of expropriation. The right to expropriate is, of course, recognized as a prerogative of every sovereign state. But the right of prompt and just compensation is, as Secretary Hull says, "a principle to which the Government of the United States and most governments of the world have emphatically subscribed."

It is sheer subterfuge for Mexico to defend her confiscatory action as essential to domestic social reforms. To that argument Secretary Hull has given a most effective answer by pointing out that desired social ends may be attained by regulatory laws and by internal reforms in conformity with law.

By following a course that alienates a comparatively rich neighbor and destroys the confidence of investors in her good faith, Mexico becomes her own worst enemy. Furthermore, her policy of confiscation injures others since it makes the United States increasingly wary of investing capital in Latin-American countries that may be influenced by the Mexican example.

Cooperation by the United States to assist neighboring countries in building up their industries and developing their natural resources more fully must be contingent upon protection of our investors against spoliation. Unless we have assurances that American property rights will be respected and that obligations due to this country will be met, in so far as possible, it would be folly to send more capital into countries which have already absorbed and dissipated a large amount of American money.

Hunger In Cleveland

Year after year the industrial cities of Ohio find themselves confronted by a shortage of relief funds necessitating drastic cuts in allowances to the unemployed.

Cleveland now faces a particularly desperate situation. Relief families are eking out inadequate food allowances with supplies furnished by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation. Single persons who are "employable" have been dropped from the food card lists and left to fend for themselves. The city is also behind in rent payments for those on relief, and probably will make no further payments before the beginning of next year.

This deplorable situation seems particularly inexcusable in view of Cleveland's business boom, said to be reminiscent of predepression days. There is no question that funds can be found to enable that city to carry out an adequate relief program. But, like many other American municipalities, Cleveland is badly handicapped by the obstructive attitude of the State.

The Ohio Legislature has not only failed to live up to its promises to match local relief expenditures; it has also refused to give Cleveland additional taxing powers that would enable it to finance its relief outlays on a better than starvation basis. The cut in the State relief appropriation is reported to be due to Gov. Bricker's determination to end the fiscal year with a balanced budget.

Many citizens of Washington are well aware of the needless suffering resulting from inadequate appropriations for social services and relief. Their plight, while not typical, is illuminating. For it emphasizes the need for a responsible local government to handle local problems.

Our cities are too frequently the victims of restrictive laws and suspicious State authorities who grudge them the freedom of action essential to the efficient functioning of local government. The sufferings of the hungry in rich industrial cities point directly to the need for municipal regimes with sufficient authority to render essential community services to their own residents.

Third-Term Realism

Reports that President Roosevelt will not seek a third term are sufficiently reasonable to justify a good deal of confidence in their accuracy, even though the President himself has not yet spoken on the subject.

It is not to be supposed that Mr. Roosevelt, acting on his own initiative, will thrust the third-term issue upon the Democratic Party. An effort to break the two-term tradition would be politically feasible only if that party, with a very substantial popular backing, should demand continuation of the President's service in the White House.

In normal circumstances the Democratic Party could be expected to frown upon the election of any man to the Presidency for three terms. The Democrats have ardently supported the two-term tradition. So deeply rooted is the sentiment favorable to this established practice that departure from it would inevitably split the party. In view of that outlook, only a grave emergency could be expected to give rise to a substantial demand that the President run again.

The most pertinent question, therefore, is whether the Democratic Party would be wise in attempting to draft Mr. Roosevelt for another four years in the White House if the country should be facing a grave crisis next year. Of course, it is impossible to see into the future or to know what the Nation's requirements may be in 1940. But it is doubtful whether any emergency that may now be visualized would justify departure from the traditional practice in electing a Chief Executive.

An election must be held in 1940 in any event. That is essential to the preservation of constitutional government. Should it be necessary to hold that election under emergency conditions, it would doubtless proceed with less friction and less probability of bitter partisanship if the third-term issue were not raised. In any circumstances, the renomination of Mr. Roosevelt would probably bring forth terrific opposition, and his foreign policies would almost certainly be drawn into the political arena.

Should the President be renominated and then defeated after an acrimonious campaign, the outcome would probably accentuate emergencies that might be facing the country instead of minimizing them. So it is difficult to foresee any circumstances that would justify the Democratic Party in prevailing upon the President to run once more against his better judgment.

Mr. Roosevelt's refusal to eliminate himself from the 1940 race thus far can be explained by a natural desire to throw his strength to some successor who may be chosen to carry on the policies of the New Deal. It would not be surprising, however, if the White House should announce the President's renunciation of any claim to the 1940 nomination soon after Congress reassembles. And the Democratic Party may be expected to acquiesce in such a decision.

Of Such Stuff

A "streamlined" processing tax, to make New Deal farm programs self-financing, is now suggested by Secretary Wallace.

The New Program Blues

From the St. John's Collegian.

It was a book! It could be nothing else but a book. The magnitude of my good fortune multiplied before my eyes.

For three months I had survived on that tiny island, alone, bereft of all things higher than food and shelter.

That horrible night, three months ago, when first the mighty waves of the Pacific had tossed me upon the land, I had prayed for one thing—life. It had been granted. In those first days of hunger and cold, again I prayed, and again my prayers were received; food and shelter were now mine. . . . .

But now I was looking upon the saviour of my sanity, a small book, caught high in the tangled coral formations. Inch by inch I made my way toward rational life. My hands bled, great dark shapes moved three feet below me in the lagoon, but on I moved. Every minute or so a breaker beat its foamy head against the material of my ascension to "intelligence," trying, in vain, to pull me into itself. Swiftly I tucked the small volume into my pocket, turned and made my way toward the beach.

The warm sand comforted my bleeding form as my trembling hands reached for the book.

No! Oh, God, no! Not the "Prior Analytics" in Greek with Latin foot notes!

It was then, I think, that I died.

What Republicans Need

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The biggest and best laugh of the year! Chairman John Hamilton of the Republican National Committee, the so-called leader of the Republican Party, is highly resentful of President Roosevelt's suggestion that both the Republicans and the Democrats postpone their national conventions until July or August.

What difference does it make when the Republicans hold their convention so far as the outcome of the 1940 Presidential election is concerned? They could postpone the convention until August or even November and still lose by just as great a majority as if they held it in June, the usual month.

If the Republicans intend or desire to make the 1940 campaign anything but a farce, they would do their party a great service to appoint a new chairman and a real leader to conduct the next Presidential campaign.

What the Republicans need is a man with some organizing ability who can bring the Hoovers and the Landons and the Vandenbergs and the Deweys of the country together to see as one man. That is probably too much to ask of any Republican because the outstanding leaders of the country today seem to be in the other party.

Peachbasket Bottoms

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I read with interest your editorial this morning on basketball and Dr. James A. Naismith, who founded the game while at the Y. M. C. A. College at Springfield, Mass. You say: "Dr. Naismith knocked the bottoms out of a pair of peachbaskets." As a matter of fact this is not quite correct.

Dr. Naismith used peachbaskets, but when the ball went in, it was necessary to use a ladder or some other means to get it out. The idea of knocking the bottoms out of the peachbaskets was conceived by C. Edward Beckett of our own city and who for more than 30 years, was director of physical education of the Washington Y. M. C. A. "Prof" Beckett, as he is affectionately known to a host of Washingtonians, may be seen at least twice a week in the "Y" gym, keeping fit, although he retired as a secretary some seven years ago.

In Answer To Mr. Stolberg

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As a former executive secretary of the Spanish Refugee Relief Campaign and of the Washington Friends of Spanish Democracy, I should like to comment on the paragraphs mentioning our organization in Mr. Benjamin Stolberg's article on "Red Front Organizations" in The Post of November 30.

First, the policies and functions of the Spanish Refugee Relief Campaign, as of the North American committee to aid Spanish Democracy formerly, are controlled by its executive board and membership. Bishop Francis J. McConnell and Dr. Walter B. Cannon were co-chairmen of the North American committee, the Honorable Harold L. Ickes is honorary chairman of the Spanish Refugee Relief Campaign and Mrs. Caspar Whitney and Mr. Philip Merivale are vice chairmen. In Washington, the Honorable Leon Henderson is president of the campaign and Mrs. Teresa K. Liss is our executive secretary.

There are chapters in 175 important cities throughout the country and our national office in New York is a member of the International Coordinating Committee, composed of representatives from Norway, Sweden, Denmark, France and all other countries supplying relief to the Spanish refugees and previously to the Spanish Republic. The participation of all interested persons, nationally and locally, is urged and welcomed. The possibility of "control" of our organization by any particular person or persons is ridiculous.

Mr. Stolberg states that, during the war period in Spain, our organization "raised hundreds of thousands of dollars, presumably for medical and other non-military aid to Loyalist Spain." The use of the word "presumably" infers, of course, that the funds raised were not expended as advertised. This insinuation is as unfair and misleading as it is vicious. What are the facts?

From October, 1936 to June 1, 1939, the North American committee collected $1,518,473.72 in cash and goods in kind, of which $1,229,860.22 went for direct relief to the Spanish Republican people. From October, 1936 to March, 1939, we in America, through the North American committee, established, equipped and maintained 9 hospitals, 175 ambulances and 10 children's homes.

We dispensed 1,261,000 pieces of clothing and pairs of shoes; 8,220,888 quarts of milk; 7,480,000 pound loaves of bread and $80,980.60 worth of miscellaneous food, including sugar, prunes, beans, coffee, chocolate, eggs, etc. We spent $79,335.75 on medical supplies—instruments, medicines, bandages and stretchers.

Regular reports from our own representatives, from the offices of the International Coordinating Committee in Paris and statements from Spanish government officials certify the receipt of these goods. The hospitals were staffed with Americans, and the children's homes were located in those areas most free from aerial attack. All relief in Spain was administered by representatives of the International Coordinating Committee, the Americans headed by Miss Constance Kyle, a trained social worker.

Mr. Stolberg further states that our "overhead aroused the curiosity of the Federal Government." He implies that some peculiar circumstance or finding necessitated Government investigation. This, of course, is untrue. The fact is that the State Department, in compliance with our laws, requires all relief agencies supplying materials to countries engaged in war to furnish the department with a certified financial statement. And the published lists showed a lower ratio of administrative expense (7.83%) for the North American Committee than for any other agency!

Now, as the Spanish Refugee Relief Campaign, and with a complete organizational and functional reorganization, we are occupied in supplying some measure of relief to the destitute refugees from Catalonia, who found asylum in France. France, occupied with her own problem, cannot bear the entire burden.

Again we are caring for sick and destitute peoples. We have again established homes for children, where they receive the physical necessities for healthy growth as well as training to fit them for adult life. Numerous Americans have "adopted" these children by maintaining them in these homes, and correspondence is carried on between the child and its foster parent. Mr. Herbert Hoover and Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt are among the representative Americans who have become foster parents of Spanish children.

Our campaign at present is eminently successful. In Washington, $1,438.30 was collected in the month of October alone. The bulk of contributions come from a widespread group of Washingtonians, from all walks of life, who have not forgotten that Spanish people were the most valiant anti-fascist fighters in the world.

Mr. Stolberg does admit that our executive board is composed of "honest, well-meaning people like Mr. Harold Ickes, its honorary chairman." Are there men of good will and humane instincts anywhere in the world who would not take pride in our record and who could refuse to support such a program as ours?

"Horse And Buggy" Traffic

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Since The Washington Post is making recommendations concerning traffic in the Nation's Capital through the editorials on "Horse and Buggy Traffic" by Howard F. Wentworth, may I suggest another step which should be taken immediately to improve traffic conditions? Three out of every five deaths in the District of Columbia occur at night. Accordingly, attention should be given to proper street illumination.

Traffic safety lighting has been tried in other jurisdictions with a marked degree of success. In Detroit, traffic safety lighting has been achieved along 300 miles of highways by increasing the height of street lights from 18 feet to 22 feet and by transforming upright lights which shine toward the sky to pendant lights that illuminate the street pavement.

Without increasing the size of the lights but by merely raising and inverting them, the night death rate along these highways was greatly reduced. As an illustration, along 37 miles of Detroit streets where traffic safety lighting was installed and put into service in 1938, the following results were noted:

For the first 9 months of 1936 and for the first 9 months of 1937, the night traffic fatalities on these streets were 32 and 34 respectively; while for the first 9 months of 1938 under the newly installed safety lighting, night traffic fatalities were reduced to 8.

The District of Columbia should give immediate attention to this problem of installing traffic safety lights.

Victims To Logic

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: That was a timely and interesting editorial about "Browder on the Campus." And the same issue of The Post carried the hot news story of Browder's stormy reception at Yale. Veni, vidi—and this is where we come in!

You suggested that "if the students cannot resist the Browder blandishments then it might be well to re-examine that part of the curriculum which deals with the inculcation of logic." Somebody has said "logic is a leaky measure."

You had defended Yale for granting permission to speak in one of its halls in contrast to Harvard, Dartmouth and Princeton which denied such permission. All four of these nurseries of our youth are now on record, one way or another.

The young gentlemen of Yale proved they could resist the logic of Browder all right. But they fell victims to the logic of the propaganda of the hundred percenters.

Nice Reporting

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The report of the Carl Sandburg meeting, which appeared in this morning's Post, is unsigned, but I should like to take this occasion to say that I think it is one of the nicest pieces of reporting I have seen in a long time. I was unable to attend the meeting, but I have known Carl Sandburg for several years and I don't quite see how a reporter who had not seen him at close range could give so clear a picture of the man and his moods in so few words.

"Brighten The Corner"

Little Mary, still under the spell of Oz, named the new doll Dorothy, although she looked more like the Scarecrow's child. You almost expected to see the floppy head nod a polite good-by, and to hear her announce in a bright, empty voice that she must follow the Yellow Brick road.

She came into being one rainy afternoon, when sniffly noses and ruffled dispositions made some major amusement project mandatory on Mother's part. The three of us went up to the attic together and emptied the rag-bag in the middle of the floor, where scraps from Mary's Easter dress rubbed shoulders, in this democracy of the discarded, with a square of blue denim, which had been bought to patch Donnie's coveralls.

There were squeals of recognition over this bright bit and that. I had a bad moment when Donnie dangled a wisp of rose-sprigged dimity before his sister's eyes, saying that it was just like the dress on the doll Santa Claus had brought last year. But Mary, who is a practical little woman, exclaimed that Santa must have left the cloth for mending; and thus the crisis passed.

It is hard not to grow sentimental over the contents of a rag-bag, when memories and associations fall as gently on the mind as rain on the attic roof. And I firmly believe that much of Dorothy's sunny nature had its beginning in the bits of cloth that went into her making.

There was her body, for instance—the largest piece in the pile, a strong, tough remnant of unbleached goods that had the look of homespun. Neither of the children remembered the day we had driven out to the mill near Atlanta to buy a bolt of the material for curtains, although they were along. Mary was only a baby, propped in her little canvas seat that hooked on beside mine in the car, and Donnie had the whole back seat to himself.

It was late October, and the first frost had flung a gay shawl over the shoulders of the hills, and sumac stalked the roadside like Indians in war-bonnets. I recalled the day vividly as I laid the piece aside, not realizing that a mere rag doll would reflect the brightness of that autumn afternoon.

Both children laughed over the scrap of red and white percale that was to be Dorothy's dress, for it was left from Donnie's clown suit, made one Halloween, and which he persisted in wearing until it was in shreds. One rainy week last spring when the washing would not dry, I let him use it as pajamas—an emergency measure that left him speechless with delight—and he went happily to sleep, like a cherub in motley.

Dorothy's underwear, appropriately enough, was left from Mary's spring petticoats, and the brown wool for her hair came from the leavings of the afghan that I thought would never be finished.

Thus we went downstairs to the sewing machine, carrying with us not only the makings of a rag doll, but a sunny October day, a Halloween that stretched over six months, and winter evenings spent over a crochet hook.

It did not take Dorothy long to take shape (with apologies to Ida Jean Kane). Donnie braided her hair and I sewed it on, and Mary tied a string around her middle so she could sit down. There was enough white nainsook left from her panties to make a pinafore with wide ruffled wings over the shoulders. She was ready for her face.

The children could not decide upon the color of her eyes. Donnie favored brown to match the hair, for he is ruled by logic; Mary, who is a small Narcissus, wanted them to be blue. The solution was simple, since there were two eyes. The effect was enchanting—blue and brown, they beamed upon us joyfully from under brows that arched in perpetual surprise. The mouth, a scarlet crescent, smiled blankly, but the vacuous effect was lightened by the glow of the eyes.

We tied a red bow on each pigtail, and she was done. Outside, the rain poured little rivers down the windowpanes, but we didn't mind, for Dorothy was smiling, and her smile was infectious. We set her on the piano and stood back to admire our handiwork, for the flush of creation was still upon us.

Tearing my attention from the doll, I looked at the children, and was startled by what I saw. Each little face was a living replica of Dorothy's beaming countenance. Two sets of brows arched high above two pairs of eyes, round with beaming good humor. Two mouths, which had been disconsolate with the rain, were curved up at the corners into wide grins.

Donnie pointed, in delighted amazement, "Sissy, look at Mama! She is just like Dorothy!"

I rushed to the mirror to meet a reflection which stared back at me with good natured idiocy. Coming back into the living room, I flopped on the couch with all the boneless ease of a rag doll, and thanked heaven for Dorothy.

Fair Enough

The Annenberg Case

IT APPEARS to me that the Moe Annenberg case in the Federal court in Chicago has received much less publicity than it really deserves, because Mr. Annenberg's racing news service for poolrooms, otherwise known as horse parlors, throughout the United States, was the instrument of vast political corruption and was, in itself, corrupt and a racket. Mr. Annenberg would seem to have made a tacit admission that his business was corrupt and a racket when he agreed recently to cancel it, thus depriving the corrupt poolroom gambling trade of its breath of life. But whether he admits it, tacitly or otherwise, or denies it, the racket was a racket all right.

Mr. Annenberg is less widely known than he should be and less well known than he wanted to be. He should be as famous as Al Capone, and although he himself sought fame in the last few years as publisher of daily papers in Miami and Philadelphia, he did not strive to impress his public with the true nature of his business, an understanding of which would have given an accurate appreciation of the character of Moe himself.

Under Many Layers Of Indictments

AS A PUBLISHER Moe went in for civic righteousness, reform and respectability. He is now under many layers of indictments in Chicago, which was the business headquarters of his racket, and, although one may hear from persons who profess to be well informed on politico-underworld affairs that some fix or compromise may be negotiated in Washington in consideration of his decision to abandon his racket, William C. Campbell, the Federal district attorney in Chicago, insists that he will make no bargain and will do his best to send Moe to prison.

The indictments charge income tax violations, conspiracy to defraud the United States, violations of the lottery laws and conspiracy to impede the administration of justice—this last, so the Government contends, by monkeying with a grand jury witness.

It is not a violation of any law to send race results, prices and all such data, or even predictions, through the mails or over the wires, but Moe and his crowd outsmarted themselves by adopting code numbers to identify the horses instead of using their names.

Fabulous Figure In Underworld

IN THE FIRST place, they may have had a simple intention to prevent thieves from pirating their information by tapping the wires, but they exploited the obscurity of those code numbers by selling sheets known as hard-cards at 25 cents each to all the poolrooms on their circuits.

Handling a program of, say, 40 races, that meant a tap of 40 quarters, or $10 a day, from each of thousands of poolrooms in the country. But the mob apparently stepped over the line into the field of lottery, as distinguished from the plain, honest distribution of news, in using the code numbers in the operation of a gambling device. The mob got so greedy that they even organized a racket to furnish chalk and pencils to the poolrooms.

Moe has been a fabulous figure in the underworld of the horse business for years, and it is not hard to believe that his income is one of the greatest in the United States or that he can lay his hands on more cash money at any time than any other individual, not barring J. P. Morgan.

Poolrooms Source Of Political Graft

CHICAGO HAS been so rotten for years that the town may seem to be abandoned and utterly without any will to turn square, but, for the first time in the modern history of the city, there are some stirrings of conscience and civic decency just now.

The poolrooms there, using Moe's information, have been the source of the big political graft, but, now that they can't get the wire service, their political protection by the local government means nothing. Thus the graft from the poolrooms is stopped and the machine is beginning to shimmy and rattle about the same as the Pendergast thing did in Kansas City just before it flew to pieces.

Some judges are crooked and partners or social pals of notorious racketeers, and one learned member of the bench recently was shown up in business deals far beyond his known earning capacity after he had earned a great reputation as a friend of the mob by dismissing thousands of defendants in gambling cases.

The whole political community reeks of corruption, but it may be remembered that Pendergast was a stout Democrat and New Dealer who was supposed to be invincible, yet finally went to prison through Federal action. These Annenberg cases and those which will stem out of the expose might do as much for Chicago.

A Plague Of Lies Besets The World

SUDDEN AND undeclared wars of powerful nations against weak ones, and the slaughter of surprised and helpless civilians including women and children, from the air, make the heart sick.

But worse perhaps than these in its effect upon civilization is the systematic corruption of human thought by the brazen or subtle perversion and distortion of truth, and the degradation of language into a medium for spreading insane mendacity.

Satanic Assault Upon Intelligence

THE SERIES OF aggressions in Europe—to confine ourselves to these—in Austria, Czechoslovakia, Albania, Poland, and Finland have been more than attacks upon these nations and their people. All have been accompanied by satanic assaults upon human intelligence. The instruments of communication have not only been seized; they have been defiled.

Totalitarian governments who command gigantic monopolies of the use of words use those monopolies as instruments of aggression against every human mind that can be reached by speech or print.

The word has, of all things, the greatest power for good or for evil. St. John called it the beginning of all things, the attribute of God, the essence of God. "In the beginning was the word, and the word was with God, and the word was God."

Truthfulness, candor, straightforwardness, plain dealing and integrity are actually created in human beings through their training in the use of language. Perjury is the mother of all crimes. The liar is the corrupter of thought and character. One prays, "Keep my tongue from evil and my lips from speaking guile."

Trickster of Words To Spread Darkness

WHEN DOSTOEVSKY'S prophet of nihilism, Shigalov, exposes his sinister lan for destroying all civilization, he advocates the use of slander and cries, "We'll set fires going; we'll set legends going!"

The purveyor of false information, the mendacious witness against his neighbor, the trickster of words who twists them to rationalize murder, the subtle libeler, who steers just clear of the law—these would use the word to spread that darkness in which Dostoevsky prophesied, "The earth will weep for its old gods."

THE PLAGUE-LIKE typhus is being spread throughout the world, and its carriers are the lice of lies. From print and speech they crawl into the brain and bit by bit produce a moral insanity. Not only does each of their breeders "make such a traitor of his memory to credit his own lies," but their combined efforts make millions of others traitors to their reason.

The Daily Worker splashes across its front page the headline, "Red Army Hurls Back Invading Finnish Troops." It tells us that Finland is a stooge for imperialist powers intending to attack Leningrad. It tells us that the puppet government set up on the Finnish border represents the great majority of Finns and that Russia is "liberating" the oppressed Finnish people. Finland has suddenly become a Fascist menace—Finland, not Nazi Germany, where spokesmen defend Russia's adventure! It fishes an old document from 1919 out of the Department of State files to justify the charge that President Roosevelt is conspiring an "imperialist" war against Russia.

Mr. Browder speaks to the Yale students on Russia's great "peace mission."

A lightning and undeclared war of 165,000,000 against less than four million people is a "peace crusade." Peace equals war; resistance equals aggression; the refusal of a small country to surrender her own most effective defenses, her only outlet to the Atlantic, her ice-free Arctic port, is "provocation" of a "war-mongering government."

Nothing New In Russian Plan

THOSE WHO ARE horrified and hostile to this attack have already half forgotten the aggressions that preceded it.

There is nothing new about the technique that Russia is using to subjugate Finland. The presentation of a preposterous demand; the claim that it is necessary to the security of the claimant; the massing of troops; the threat to use force; the pose of the "liberator"; the demand for a new, more "reasonable" and more "representative government; finally, the attack, if the demands are not conceded—there is not a hair's breadth of difference between the procedure against Finland and that against Austria, Czechoslovakia and Poland.

And every one of these seizures was preceded, accompanied and followed by the plague of lies.

INSIDE THESE totalitarian powers lying has been elevated to such an instrument of domestic policy that in Russia men have lied their heads off—in the precise sense of that statement. In the preposterous Russian trials it was not enough to commit official murders. First, the victims must be coerced into public self-defilement with lying testimony. Then they are assassinated—and the policies they are accused of advocating are as likely as not, carried out.

In Germany it was not enough to indulge in the most brutal persecutions. A letter-writing campaign was organized to persuade and coerce decent citizens into writing perjurious denials abroad.

Nihilism Perils All The World

THE WHOLE WORLD is threatened by nihilism, by the disintegration of all those standards of reference against which human beings may measure moral and intellectual values. The world is being systematically and satanically corrupted.

In what frame of reference and by what standards, for instance, did an overwhelming majority of polled Princeton freshmen decide that Hitler was the greatest living man?

Steel Operations Seen Holding at Current Level

Cleveland, Dec. 3 (AP).—Steel operations are up ½ point to 94 per cent of capacity, says the magazine Steel.

Reaffirmation of prices on most products for first-quarter delivery has affected demand but little, the publication says, adding that while new business has tended to moderate in some districts "bookings in other areas are equaling or exceeding shipments which are close to mill capacity."

Heavy commitments for the automotive industry are in prospect for the month, releases from railroad shops and freight car builders are increasing, but the structural shape and concrete reinforcing bar markets are less favorable.

Two-point gains in operations last week boosted the Youngstown rate to 92 per cent, Cleveland to 90 and Eastern Pennsylvania to 88. Cincinnati was down 4½ to 80. Buffalo 2 to 93 and Chicago 1 to 94. Unchanged were Pittsburgh, 94; Wheeling, 93; Detroit, 90; St. Louis, 81; New England, 100, and Birmingham, 94.

PWA Declares Its Costs Show No Excess

Despite wage scales and quality materials, the cost of construction of Public Works Administration projects have shown little, if any, increase over comparable costs in private construction, the PWA said yesterday.

Pointing out that construction under its regulations go beyond the demands of private industry, both in labor conditions, materials and standard of design, the administration said "reliable comparisons" showed its over-all costs have run from equal, or slightly less, up to 4.8 per cent more, than non-PWA construction.

Finland And The Balance Of Power

FORTY YEARS AGO indignation swept over Europe because Czar Nicholas II sought to curtail Finland's rights of self-government. Finland had been a part of the domain of the Russian crown for 90 years. But from the outset, when it was wrested from Sweden in 1809, it had been a semi-autonomous state which addressed the Czar not as the Czar of Russia but as the Grand Duke of Finland.

By their ability and the persistence of their complaints the Finns had wrung additional concessions from the Czars. They had their own constitution, their own laws, their own army, currency and tariff, and until 1899 their own postal service. Only in the control of their foreign relations were they completely in Russian hands.

The modest curtailment of their rights imposed by Nicholas II 40 years ago aroused indignation all over Europe primarily for one reason. The Finns were recognized as a superior people. They were few in number and their land was poor in natural resources, but they had built a civilization which measured up to the best that the world had attained and was, of course, vastly superior to any that could be found elsewhere under the Russian crown.

Sheer Jealousy May Be Factor

WITH NONE of the ballyhoo that accompanied the Russian "five-year" plans, the Finns have more than held their advantage over the Russians for the last 20 years by the purely material gauge of the standard of living. In the cultural, spiritual and political phases of civilization the gulf between them is too broad to be measured. Probably every Western visitor to Communist Russia who has come out via Finland—even those visitors who believed and may still believe that eventually something worth while will come from the vast energy released by the Communist revolution in Russia—has felt when he crossed the border that he moved instantly from a semi-barbaric state to one that was truly civilized.

While defense is the excuse, sheer jealousy of the superior attainments of the Finns may have something to do with Stalin's current aggression.

Almost anything that the President can say or do without involving us in war in behalf of Finland is pretty sure to meet with the warm approval of the American public. Probably nothing he can do will serve any purpose more useful than to let off our steam. There is just a slight chance that somebody near the top in Russia will think that sometime within a generation it may be useful to have at least a tolerant attitude in the United States toward the Soviet Union. If Ambassador Oumansky, who is smart enough, isn't too scared of his superiors to tell them the truth, he will have informed them already that the Finnish episode shocks the American public; probably even more than the swallowing of Czecho-Slovakia, that he may soon be on his way back to Moscow, and that if Russia gets caught in that double-squeeze between Germany and Japan it can't expect any sympathy from us.

Nazis Menaced Most by New Move

THIS BRINGS US to the changing balance of power in Europe. While Finland is the immediate victim of Soviet aggression, the great power that is menaced most by it is Germany. But the menace extends also to Great Britain and France. Whether Germany or Russia is the greater menace to the Anglo-French alliance and the small western states dependent on its victory is an open question. Germany seems to be becoming weaker and the Soviet Union stronger. Nobody can deny that the latter has gained more than the former out of this war up to date.

There were sober students of history and foreign policy in England as well as here who warned that if Great Britain and France went to war with Germany the opportunity would be seized by Russia. They felt that a strong Russia required a strong Germany. Their warnings were scornfully dismissed as "class-thinking" by radical-liberals or by those who were so fanatical that they could see no menace except Hitler, or by those who were gullible enough to regard the Soviet Union as a friend of democratic government and as a nonaggressive power.

On the part of the British, however, fear of Russia is based on experience and plain facts of geography, raw materials and population. From the downfall of Napoleon until after the turn of this century Russia was almost constantly regarded as the greatest threat to the British Empire. For more than a generation during that period, following the Franco-Prussian war, Germany's influence in central and western Europe was greater than it has become under Hitler.

On our part, there is less to fear, but much to be pained by. The pain must be especially keen to those who thought the only real threat to western civilization was Hitler.

Prisoner Of The War

By Barnet Nover

Hitler, Stalin And Finland

THE LABORED efforts made by the Nazi press to condone the Russian invasion of Finland speaks volumes for the terrible dilemma in which Germany now finds herself.

Finland happens to be the latest victim of the brute spirit that, with increasing virulence, has been manifesting itself in international affairs these last eight years. There have been many others—China, Ethiopia, Spain, Austria, Czecho-Slovakia, Albania, Poland.

The Nazis cannot reasonably complain because Stalin is now resorting to tactics previously employed by Hitler. Indeed, the Fuehrer should feel flattered that his once bitterest enemy has, in so short a time, become so ardent an imitator and disciple.

Yet it can hardly be pleasing to the Berlin government that Germany is in no position to protest let alone oppose, the further extension of Russian influence and authority in the Baltic area; that she must, on the contrary, seek to justify whatever Russia does.

THERE IS a close and illuminating parallel to the position of Germany today in the position of Italy at the time of Austro-German Anschluss.

When Hitler planted the swastika flag on the Brenner there is not the slightest doubt that the Italian government and people viewed the development with consternation and alarm. Austria had been a useful buffer between Germany and Italy. Austria's disappearance constituted a real threat to Italian security. But Mussolini had to make the best of it—and did.

By his invasion of Ethiopia and his intervention in Spain he had given hostages to fortune. So while he had vigorously and successfully opposed the threatened destruction of Austrian independence in 1934, he could not lift a finger to prevent it four years later.

War had made him a prisoner. With as good grace as he could muster he kissed the feet that had kicked him. Indeed, he made a virtue of necessity. In the year following Anschluss German-Italian relations seemingly became closer than ever.

IT IS NOW Hitler's turn to be a prisoner of war. In embarking on a course involving armed conflict the Fuehrer, like Mussolini before him, was forced to give hostages to fortune. And the Mussolini role of 1938 in the tragedy of Austria is now being played by Hitler in the Baltic.

The full terms of the German-Russian agreement of last August have never been made public. It is now apparent that they included a provision for the "repatriation" of the German population of the Baltic states. It is possible that the partition of Poland and Russian hegemony over Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania were part of the deal. Whether there were also provisions concerning the fate of the Scandinavian nations and the Balkan states is not at all certain.

IN ANY EVENT whether or not Hitler voluntarily agreed to the course which Russia has been pursuing these last months is relatively immaterial. The fact is that it can hardly be to Germany's long-range interests to have Russia astride the vital ore route from Sweden to the Reich and blocking the approaches to the southeast.

For the time being there is nothing which Germany can do about it, however. Hitler probably never calculated on Anglo-French resistance to a German attack on Poland in the first place, and certainly not on their unwillingness to make peace once the destruction of Poland became an accomplished fact. Which means that now and for an undetermined period in the future Hitler's hands will be tied in the west, while his Russian partner is free to expand in the East.

WHAT MAY prove of no less importance in the long run is that the war has freed Mussolini. With Hitler playing second fiddle to Stalin, the Duce is no longer under the compulsion he was to play second fiddle to the Fuehrer. Italy can now pursue a relatively independent course, which explains why the Fascist kingdom is at one and the same time friendly to Germany, hostile to Russia and critical of the Allies.

If German-Italian relations between 1936 and 1939 are any guide, Russia's invasion of Finland, however unpalatable it may be from the viewpoint of Germany's basic and long-range interests, need not result in any weakening of German-Russian ties.

On the contrary, an increase in Red imperialism may, for a while, help draw Germany and Russia closer together by transforming the separate wars they are waging into one war.

Germany and Russia are now more than ever in the same boat and efforts to pry them apart by employing those tactics of appeasement which were alternately used to wean Italy away from Germany and Germany away from Italy may have no greater success when applied to the new axis.

Inter-American Experts Consider A Central Bank

By the Associated Press

Monetary experts of the Inter-American economic committee will consider today a tentative draft of plans for a super central bank, patterned after the Federal Reserve System, to assist in developing trade between North and South America.

The monetary subcommittee, now considering the plan, has sought technical assistance from the United States Treasury, the Federal Reserve System and private bankers.

It is understood the proposed bank would be empowered to rediscount Government and commercial notes, make long-term investments, lend and borrow money, and act as fiscal agent for Federal, State and municipal governments. Under present plans, it would be located in New York.

If the proposal is approved, it will be submitted to the governments.

NLRB Rules Against A. F. L. in Colorado

The National Labor Relations Board yesterday dismissed a petition of the International Association of Bridge, Structural and Ornamental Iron Workers Union, of the American Federation of Labor, to be declared the sole bargaining agent for employes of both the Denver and Pueblo (Colo.) plants of the Colorado Builders' Supply Company.

The NLRB held that the two plants, 125 miles apart, could not be considered a single unit for collective bargaining, and that while the union had a majority of employes of the Denver plant, it lacked a majority of the Pueblo workers.

Budget Conference

("Harold D. Smith, director of the budget, flew to Warm Springs at Presidential summons and discussed with the President the cutting of the budget."—News item.)

Franklin.—Good morning, Harold. I sent for you to discuss cutting the budget.

Harold.—Well, we've got a lovely day for it.

Franklin.—I like a clear day like this for going over figures. You can see the decimal points for miles. Are we all set?

Harold—I think so.

Franklin.—Have you got plenty of erasers?

Harold.—Yep! Blue pencils and everything, too. But let's decide how we work.

Franklin.—What do you mean 'how we work?'

Harold.—Which of us wipes out figures and which of us puts 'em in?

Franklin.—Let's not pin each other down. You erase something or add something as you think best and I'll do the same.

Harold.—But won't this mean confusion?

Franklin.—Don't talk like a Republican!

Harold (holding the budget).—It's quite a nice budget, eh?

Franklin (admiringly).—Must be a fifteen pounder. A little fat for this time of year.

Harold.—Nonsense. Our budgets are fat in all times of the year.

Franklin.—Now, let's get down to carving. Have you brought the necessary surgical instruments?

Harold.—I got an axe, four hatchets and . . .

Franklin.—So you're a Republican at heart, eh!

Franklin (after a few moments)—I thought you'd do some cutting on the way down in the airplane.

Harold.—I tried to but it was up so high.

Franklin.—The plane?

Harold.—No, the budget.

Franklin.—Let's get down to business. Where can we start to cut?

Harold.—We can cut expenditures where it won't hurt. The Indians should be willing to economize; they're used to it. And we can cut some of the Treasury Department estimates, Morgenthau could get along with one less stenographer.

Harold.—We could set an example by doing our part.

Franklin.—That's a good idea. I'll cut out a couple of radio hookups and use a smaller cruiser for fishing. What can you economize on, Harold?

Harold (thinking hard).—I can save a little gas.

Franklin.—How?

Harold.—By not flying around in airplanes to talk about cutting the budget.

Early Bright Sun Lures Capital Outdoors to Play in Brisk Wind

MARCH-LIKE winds swept December's first Sunday yesterday. But Washingtonians faced it on streets, where Christmas windows reflected warmth and bright tinsels. And in East Potomac Park, particularly, they rode horses and bicycles and played golf while the wind raised a small wash across the sea wall.

THE wind, the Weather Bureau said, reached a velocity as high as 30 miles an hour. People standing at the sea wall shivered. A tiny sail boat had started out, Its canvas swung into profile; then the boat turned to shore again, wallowing.

PEOPLE saw the sun yesterday morning and went outdoors, deceived by the bright day. They found it cold. But the sun was a welcome sight after the rain and fog of Saturday. So they went out anyway.

SNATCHES of talk here and there were as old as the American Christmas: "That's what I want there, mama," a child was saying . . . A man and woman pointed to a fat pasteboard Santa Claus, calling his name in German . . . Two men argued over how long two tremendous candles would burn . . . A man told his woman companion that "I can't stand this window shopping any longer." He walked off down the street. She stood, fixed, before a wonderland of glitter and gifts.

Lack of Rain In Farm Belt Harms Wheat

Dryest Fall on Record Is Noted in Mississippi Basin

This fall has been the dryest of record between the Appalachians and the Rocky Mountain, the Weather Bureau reported yesterday.

Most of the region, which comprises the bulk of the Nation's farm land, received less than half the normal rainfall during September, October and November. Some sections got less than a fourth the normal amount.

"The persistent dryness and abnormally high temperatures in the interior valleys and great plains depleted soil moisture to an extent that conditions became outstandingly unfavorable for the seeding of winter wheat," the Weather Bureau stated. "Seeding was delayed, and the soil was so dry over large areas of the Western wheat belt that germination was impossible."

Sioux City, Iowa, had the lowest rainfall of record with only 0.6 of an inch for the three months, or about 10 per cent of normal, station reports indicated. Dodge City, Kans., and North Platte, Nebr., received only 0.8 of an inch for the period, while Minneapolis records show last month was the dryest November in 100 years.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Hans Kindler conducts the National Symphony Orchestra Sunday afternoon in Constitution Hall. Program: "Academic Festival Overture" (Brahms), "Eine Kleine Nachtkusik" (Mozart), "Le Rouet d'Omphale" (Saint-Saens), Symphony No. 5 in C minor (Beethoven).

"We wish you a happy Christmas and a merry New Year" was Dr. Hans Kindler's parting remark yesterday afternoon in Constitution Hall to the auditors who were with applause and cheers wishing Godspeed to him and the members of the National Symphony Orchestra on the eve of their Northern tour. His brief speech was uttered after he had been recalled three times at the close of the concert, and the answer of the assemblage was to summon him back, making the total recalls for the afternoon seven.

"We are leaving you tomorrow," he said, "on a rather strenuous tour. While we are away we will be in competition with the orchestras of Philadelphia, New York and Boston. I would remind you that they have a third more players than we have. If someone would like to make us a Christmas present of 33 more men, we would be very grateful. We wish you a happy Christmas and a merry New Year."

The ovation to the orchestra and its conductor burst forth following an admirably vital and eloquent performance of Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, for the concert was the second in the series of "Beloved Symphonic Masterpieces," and the audience had come to hear music held in affection. Dr. Kindler's reading was penetrative in the treatment of phrasing and dynamics, and persuative in poetic power. Particularly effective was the playing of those bridge passages in which Beethoven conveyed the sense of suspense and mystery before the entrance of a significant theme.

In his Fifth symphony Beethoven expressed every characteristic of his creative genius; it summarizes all that he had said up to the time of its composition and it foreshadows the greater things that he was to say before the end of his labors. Many other composers have paid tribute to Beethoven through their comments on this work, among them Spohr, Schumann, Berlioz and Wagner. E. T. A. Hoffmann, who was a composer and critic as well as the author of tales of fantasy, wrote some lines that are worth quoting:

"Beethoven's instrumental music reveals the realms of the colossal. With burning rays he seems to pierce the profound gloom of these regions until we become aware of the shadows of giant forms, now rising, now sinking and surrounding us closer and closer . . . In the Andante, the formidable genius who gripped and racked our spirits in the Allegro reappears menacing in the storm cloud wherein he lurks concealed, while the pleasing forms which enveloped and consoled us take flight at the gleam of his lightnings. In the Scherzo, moments of disquietude and presentiments of an ideal realm grip us once again. The general effect of the symphony is that of an inspired rhapsody, but every hearer of sensibility will be deeply affected by one lasting impression—that of infinite, unsatisfied yearning."

The concert began with the "Academic Festival Overture" with which Brahms acknowledged the honorary degree of Doctor of Philosophy conferred upon him by the University of Breslau. Os one listens to this utterly unacademic music, one cannot help but feel that Brahms was not greatly impressed by his doctorate. There is a twinkling humor in his treatment of the university songs which suggests that the life of the student is preferable to the dignity of cap and gown.

Mozart's serenade for strings, "A Little Night Music," was the second number on the program. This exquisite suite never fails to charm, whatever the time and place of its performance, but its ideal setting is the one for which Mozart probably designed it—night and the open air. I had the opportunity of hearing it once in the courtyard of of the players lighted by candles the Residenz at Slazburg, the desks and the audience alternately in shadow and moonlight as the cloud-wrack of a recent thunderstorm passed overhead, and the memory of that magical hour is indelible.

The fourth item of the enjoyable concert was Saint-Saens' descriptive piece, "Omphale's Spinning Wheel." Saint-Saens was one of the first composers to take up Liszt's idea of the symphonic poem, and in the four that he wrote he was every whit as clever as his model. The instrumentation is unfailingly apt and the tonal colors are applied deftly.

Six Latin American Nations to Honor Union

Six Latin American republics will issue stamps next year commemorating the fiftieth anniversary of the Pan American Union, Dr. L. S. Rowe, director general, said yesterday.

The governments of Chile, Costa Rica, Cuba, Honduras, Panama and the Dominican Republic already have authorized issuance of the stamps.

The Federal Diary

Mr. Friendly Tells Mr. Ickes 'ExLibris,' Etc.

By Alfred Friendly

In the interests of justice, fair play and good Latin, it has seemed wise to disclose the following correspondence:

The Secretary of the Interior,
Washington, Nov. 27, 1939.

My Dear Mr. Friendly:

In "The Federal Diary" for November 21, you quoted me as saying: "Ignorantia legis neminem escusat." I don't know whether you are trying to have me disbarred or not; but I shudder to think that other lawyers, who might read these horrendous words, would be justified in thinking that I didn't speak the right legal Latin, which is "Ignorantia legis non excusat."

I will never be able to hold up my head again among my fellow lawyers. Sincerely yours,

Harold L. Ickes.

The Washington Post
Washington, D. C., Dec. 1, 1939.

Hon. Harold L. Ickes,
Secretary of the Interior,
Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Secretary:

I thought I heard you say, "Ignorantia legis non excusat," but I could scarcely believe my ears.

I was far from entertaining any malicious desire to mock you in the eyes of other lawyers. On the contrary, my sole effort was to spare you that exact result.

As a matter of fact, I first carried on a deep philosophical argument with myself on the moral obligations of a reporter—whether to reveal the facts, no matter how bad, or, in the interest of public confidence in the Government's stability and erudition, to shield a man from the consequences of his own words.

I finally decided that, although your mistake was a front page story, it was not worth stirring up a Cabinet scandal, creating an anti-New Deal pressure group among the Nation's Latin teachers and forcing a final break from the Administration of the various bar associations.

Your letter, however, forces the undoing of all my charitable works.

Stevenson's "Home Book of Quotations," Funk & Wagnall's and Webster's dictionaries, Wharton's "Law Lexicon, Words and Phrases," "Black's Legal Dictionary," "Broom's Legal Maxims" and "Bouvier's Legal Dictionary" all give the quotation as "Ignorantia legis neminem excusat."

Only two of these volumes even acknowledge the existence of the "non" form, and then only with properly sneering condescension. What is more, they give it "excusat"— "ignorantia legis non excusat."

Cicero had a word for it. "Culusvis hominis est errare; nullius nisi insipientis in errore perseverare."

Very sincerely,
ALFRED FRIENDLY.

*For the benefit of youse guys in the back room, the above-quoted nifty means, "It is in the nature of every man to err, but only the witless perseveres in error."

Six Children Must Be Rescued By Giving Their Father a Chance

Family No. 4

When Mr. M, his wife and their six children were put out of their basement apartment—with nowhere else to go—months of misfortune came to a bitter climax.

Until a few months ago, he was able to support his family. But out of work, unable to find more, he fell far behind on the payment of the rent. The landlady tried to force out the family and in the argument he was charged with assault. The judge suspended sentence but in the meantime the mother and the year-old baby had spent the night at the Woman's Bureau and the other children at the Receiving Home.

But Mr. M was determined that the home must not be broken up. He walked the streets and finally borrowed $8 to rent one basement room with the use of a kitchen, which was in one end of a furnace room. The children played amid ashes and soot.

Out of this bleak, unhealthy atmosphere, an agency rescued the family, placed them in a three-room apartment, paid $9 rent and gave them food for the immediate emergency. But beyond that—their future depends on the neighborly strangers who help them through The Post's Christmas Fund.

The father is trying to get a job which will pay him $36 a month for a three-month training period. If he gets it, that will pay only the rent. The family needs funds for food, clothing and other expenses. With $150 for the next three months, the father will have a chance to take care of his family, himself.

Family certified and help administered without cost by the Bureau of Rehabilitation; amount needed, $150.

Operation for Father, Dental Care For Mother Will Save This Family

Family No. 5

The father must have an operation—but how will the family struggle along without his earnings? He is a steady, reliable worker but, with five children to support, he has never made enough money to store up savings for such an emergency. Now Mr. D is ill and worried, and Mrs. D, too, is in poor health.

He is such a good worker that his employer is willing to hold his job for him for two months, while he has a much-needed hernia operation. Since he drives a truck and moves furniture, it is impossible for him to continue the work with the trouble uncorrected. In fact, the doctor at the clinic says he is amazed Mr. D has continued to work this long without causing irreparable damage.

But he felt he could not afford to stop until he had to, because he has been earning only $20 a week and it takes every penny of that to pay the rent and buy food for his family. Poison from abscessed teeth is undermining Mrs. D's health, but there has never been enough money ahead to correct her condition.

The children, ranging from 3 to 13 years, are dependent on his support. It would be a real Christmas in this family if they had enough money in sight to care for them while Mr. D is in the hospital and to provide dentures for Mrs. D. With $250, the family can be provided for, while their difficulties are being overcome.

This family certified and help administered without cost by the Salvation Army; amount needed, $250.

Russia Will Dominate Europe After War, Scott Nearing Says

Russia will emerge from the present war as the dominant power in Europe, Dr. Scott Nearing, former professor of economics at the University of Pennsylvania, said last night.

Speaking to an audience of 200 in the Pythian Temple, Dr. Nearing said that the main distinction between the World War and the present conflict is that the first "was dominated by the British Empire and its interests, while the present is dominated by the Soviet Union."

"National rivalries," he said "have given place to class rivalries."

The "ruling class" in England and France," he said, has sought to use Nazi Germany as the spearhead of an attack upon Communist Russia. This policy, he believes, has halted for the moment, because of distrust of Hitler.

"As soon as Hitler is dispatched," he said, "and a dependable conservative government or military dictatorship established, the drive against the U. S. S. R. will be begun again."

Russia, he said, signed the pact with Germany to split Germany from England and France and to strengthen its own strategic position by gaining control of the Baltic. The invasion of Finland, he went on, is part of this Baltic policy.

Dr. Nearing will address the student assembly at American University this morning and take part in a round table discussion at a luncheon at Brookings Institution at noon. At 8:15 p. m. today he will discuss "The Economics of Social Decay" at the Friends Meeting House, 2111 Florida avenue northwest.

Dr. Teller to Talk On 'Labelling' Atoms

Dr. Edward Teller, professor of physics at George Washington University, will give the first of a series of three lectures on physics at 8:15 tonight in the Hall of Government.

Dr. Teller will describe and demonstrate the radioactive isotope for "tagging or labelling" atoms, and the use of these radioactive atoms as "tracers" in following them through chemical transformations and through the bodies of living organisms. He will be assisted in the demonstration by Dr. Merle Tuve and Dr. P. H. Abelson, of the Department of Terrestrial Magnetism of the Carnegie Institution.

Melvyn Douglases Set Capital Awhirl

Judge and Mrs. McAllister and the Walter Wyatts Entertain Notables From Hollywood on Visit to City

When Hollywood comes to Washington it certainly keeps the town in a whirl. Since Mr. and Mrs. Melvyn Douglas arrived last Thursday they and their friends have been on a constant merry-go-round of parties.

Yesterday afternoon two parties in their honor held the social spotlight in and near Washington. The first was a 4:30 to 7 reception given by Judge and Mrs. Thomas F. McAllister at their home, 415 Wolfe street, Alexandria, and the other a dinner by Mr. and Mrs. Walter Wyatt at their home on Kalmina road.

Justice and Mrs. McAllister and the guests of honor received in the drawing room of the lovely old home which is known as the Holland House, and is one of the most beautiful in the country. Mrs. McAllister was gowned in turquoise crepe, fashioned floor length with a fitted jacket trimmed in silver and gold embroidery design. Mrs. Douglas (who is Actress Helen Gahagan) wore a floor-length black taffeta frock, fashioned with a flaring skirt and jacket with long, fitted sleeves.

Among those assisting was Miss Minnie Mae Fleming, who was generally in charge. She was gowned in pencil blue, floor-length crepe, fashioned on fitted lines, and wore a corsage of gardenias as did the other assistants. With her was Mrs. Frank A. Bedford, in a black ensemble, sister of Mrs. McAllister. She came from Philadelphia to be house guest for the week-end.

Variety of Viands Awaiting Guests

Guests found on arriving in the spacious dining room a variety of viands. The dining table which held them was a large oval of highly polished wood and exquisite workmanship and was once the property of Catherine the Great of Russia.

Generally assisting during the afternoon was Mrs. J. Frederick Essary. She was gowned in raspberry crepe, fashioned floor length on flowing lines. Among those pouring was Mrs. Robert F. Jackson, looking chic in a black ensemble, set off with a silver fox turban.

Others assisting were Mrs. Harry W. Blair, Mrs. John O. Herrick, and Mrs. May Thompson Evans. Noted during the afternoon were Justice and Mrs. Stanley Reed, Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. Henry F. Grady, Mrs. Blair Bannister, Representative and Mrs. Jerry Voorhis, Solicitor General Robert H. Jackson, Mr. and Mrs. Jerome Frank, former Attorney General Homer S. Cummings, Maritime Commissioner and Mrs. Edward C. Moran, jr., the Czecho-Slovak Minister and Mme. Hurban, Justice and Mrs. Justin Miller, Miss Ann Callaghan, Mrs. Nellie Tayloe Ross, Director of the Mint, and Mr. and Mrs. George Maurice Morris.

Also Mr. and Mrs. Emil Hurja, Mr. and Mrs. Gardner Jackson, Mr. and Mrs. Ney Evans, Leon Henderson, Edward Van Devanter, who later attended a wild turkey supper given by Mrs. Frank Mason Dillard at her Alexandria home; Mr. and Mrs. Paul Sifton and scores more.

Children Want Their Autographs

On leaving guests found at the gate dozens of school children who asked anxiously when Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Fairbanks were coming out. On being told that it was Mr. and Mrs. Melvyn Douglas, they said they knew it all the time and they wanted autographs.

Mr. and Mrs. Douglas will leave this afternoon for New York where Mr. Douglas will stop briefly and then fly to Hollywood for the beginning of his next motion picture. Mrs. Douglas will remain in New York for several weeks to arrange for her new play, scheduled to open in January. This morning Mr. Douglas will visit the Supreme Court session at the invitation of Justice William O. Douglas.

Plans Christmas Wedding

MISS VIRGINIA CLARK,

whose engagement to Edward Deming Carville was recently announced, has selected Tuesday, December 26, as her marriage date. The betrothal was made known recently at a dinner party at the Army-Navy Country Club. Miss Clark is the daughter of Capt. Glenmore Ford Clark, Medical Corps, U. S. A., and Mrs. Clark, and is widely known in service circles here. At present her parents are stationed at Newport, R. I. Miss Clark is a graduate of the College of William and Mary and is a member of Pi Beta Phi sorority and Phi Beta Kappa. Mr. Carville is the son of Gov. Edward Peter Carville, of Nevada, and Mrs. Carville. The prospective bridegroom attended Notre Dame and Leland Stanford Universities and is a graduate of George Washington University. He is a member of Kappa Sigma fraternity and at present is attending Georgetown University Law School

Miss Littlehale Plights Troth

Mrs. William Fiske Whitney, of Boston, announces the engagement of her niece, Miss Louise Elliott Littlehale, to Donald Bruce Mansfield, of Canton, Ohio, who is at present living in Washington. He is the son of Mrs. Katherine Marr Mansfield, of Canton.

Miss Littlehale, who is the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. James Merritt Littlehale, of San Francisco, was graduated from the Winsor School in Boston, Bryn Mawr College and the Yale Law School and has spent a year at the Sorbonne.

Mr. Mansfield was graduated from Kenyon College, Ohio, and received his law degree from Duke University. He also received the degree of doctor of science of law from the Yale Law School. The wedding will take place late in December.

Miss Mary Draper To Make Her Bow During Holidays

Latest addition to the ranks of the debutantes is Miss Mary Draper, now attending Vassar. She will divide her holidays between this city and New York, but will make her debut here in the Christmas season.

The daughter of Ernest Gallaudet Draper, she will be presented to society by Mr. and Mrs. Draper on December 28 at the Draper home at 2527 Belmont road at a 5 to 7 p. m. reception. Mr. Draper, one of the governors of the Federal Reserve System, formerly was Assistant Secretary of Commerce.

Mlle. Fant Married Here

The daughter of the Mayor of Stockholm yesterday became the bride of the newly appointed Swedish Counselor to Hamburg, Germany, when Mlle. Gunilla Fant was married to Gosta L. S. af Petersens, retiring attache of the Swedish Legation here.

The civil ceremony took place at 11 o'clock at the home of Judge Robert Mattingly in Chevy Chase. The bride, who was unattended, wore a dark blue velvet afternoon frock with hat to match and a corsage of yellow orchids.

The only ones attending the ceremony were the three witnesses, Folke Wennerberg, Counselor of the Swedish Legation; Harry Eriksson, Commercial Counselor of the Legation, and Curt Leijon, Legation attache.

Following the ceremony there was a luncheon at Normandy Farms, which was attended by many New York friends of the couple. At 5:30 in the afternoon they were feted by a reception given by the Minister of Sweden and Mme. Bostrom at the Legation. Mme. Bostrom was gowned in floor-length lace of pale gray accented with a pink flower at the neckline.

The couple left last evening for New York and will visit Sweden before going to Hamburg. The bride was educated in England, and Mr. Petersens, son of Mr. and Mme. Gosta L. S. af Petersens of Sveg, received his education in Sweden.

Five Masters of Fox Hunt at Luncheon Given by Mrs. Linn, of Lake Forest, Ill.

MRS. HOWARD LINN, of Lake Forrest, Ill., who has been staying at North Wales Club, Warrenton, for the fox hunting season, gave a large luncheon party yesterday at the club for her many Virginia friends. The dining room and sitting rooms were decorated in white chrysanthemums, Easter lilies and white pine, making the old house a bower of beauty. Upon arrival of the guests at 1 o'clock, cocktails were served in the marble room and tables seating ten were arranged around the spacious dining room. A buffet luncheon of hot and cold dishes was served.

Among Mrs. Linn's guests were five masters of foxhounds and several former masters. They included Amory S. Carhart, M. F. H., of the Warrenton Hunt; Daniel C. Sands, M. F. H., of the Middleburg Hunt; Archibald C. Randolph, M. F. H., of the Piedmont Hunt; Sterling Larrabee, M. F. H. of the Old Dominion Hunt, and Harry Worcester Smith, M. F. H. of the Grafton Hunt, in Massachusetts; Mrs. Robert C. Winmill, former master of the Warrenton Hunt; Delancey Nicoll and Robert Young, acting masters of the Orange County Hunt, and Richard Kirkpatrick, acting master of the Warrenton Hunt.

OTHER GUESTS included Mr. and Mrs. Sterling Lacy, of Leesburg, brother-in-law and sister of Mrs. Linn; Mrs. Carhart, Mrs. Randolph, Mrs. Daniel C. Sands, Mrs. Sterling Larrabee, Mrs. Nicoll, Mrs. Robert Young, Mr. and Mrs. Norman de R. Whitehouse, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Winthrope, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin B. King, Mr. and Mrs. William Langley, Mr. and Mrs. William B. Streett, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Frost, Mr. and Mrs. John Hinckley, Mr. and Mrs. William Emory, Mr. and Mrs. Crompton Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Earl Potter.

Still others there were Mrs. Graham Lewis (Elizabeth Arden), of New York, who arrived yesterday to spend a few days at North Wales Club, and Mr. and Mrs. Henry Norton, also of New York, who are staying at the club.

Also Mrs. Isabel Cotton-Smith, Mrs. George Sloane, Mrs. Merrill Hubbard, of Chicago, and her sister and house guest, Mrs. Frank Sears, of Boston, Mass.; Miss Eleanor Keith, of Brockton, Mass., another visitor here; Mrs. Norman Toerge, Mrs. Silvie Hazard, Mrs. Amory Perkins, Mrs. Robert Burke, Robert C. Winmill, Tommie Leiter, Frank C. Littleton, sr., William Hulbert, Harvey Shafer, Freddy Warburg, Louie Duffey, Gerald Webb, Ernest White, Winston Frost and Keith Officer, of Washington.

MR. AND MRS. H. GWYNNE Tayloe, sr., who are leaving Virginia tomorrow to spend the winter at their cottage near Clearwater, Fla., gave a farewell party on Saturday night for a few of their friends at their home "Windover," near Middleburg. A turkey dinner with everything that goes with it was served. Guests included Mr. and Mrs. Gwynne Tayloe, jr., of Front Royal, Miss Fanny Gardiner, Mrs. Mackenzie Tabb, Robert Sharp, Moncure Lyon, Mack Tabb, and Richard Tayloe.

MR. AND MRS. HUGH Fontaine entertained on Friday night at their home near Upperville at a duck dinner. The Fontaines had shot the ducks at the Brook Club, near Widewater, that week. The ducks were cooked on a turning spit in front of a hot open fire in the long dining room. It was fascinating to see them being cooked right in front of one's eyes—as in the olden days. They were basted continually by a white-coated colored man cook.

AMONG THOSE THERE for this dinner party were Senator and Mrs. Thomas Glasscock, Mr. and Mrs. T. Beatty Brown, Mr. and Mrs. George Robert Slater, Miss Anne Gochnauer and William H. Lipscomb.

Mrs. H. Rozier Dulany, of Washington, spent several days at her Virginia home, Oakley, last week. She came down for the annual hog killing, always an occasion on the farm. Mrs. Dulany was joined by her niece, Mrs. Hanson Ely. Mr. and Mrs. Rozier Dulany, jr., motored out from Washington yesterday and spent the day at Oakley.

Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Tartiere gave a children's party on Saturday afternoon in honor of their daughter Elaine's ninth birthday. The 26 guests enjoyed a moving picture show and supper.

Abigail Hartman Rice Chapter Indorses Mrs. Good to Be D. A. R. State Treasurer

The Abigail Hartman Rice Chapter, D. A. R. has unanimously endorsed the candidacy of its regent, Mrs. Edgar E. Good, for state treasurer.

Mrs. Good, who will complete her two-year term as regent of the chapter in June, has been serving as president of the Regents' Club of the District. She has also served her chapter as vice regent, and treasurer, and has been keenly and actively interested in D. A. R. work.

Our Flag Chapter will hold its annual benefit card party, Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, at the Kennedy-Warren. Mrs. William Hannay, vice regent and chairman of the party, will receive with the regent, Mrs. Corbin Thompson.

Included among the invited guests are the state officers, Miss Lillian Chenoweth, regent; Mrs. Harry C. Oberholser, vice regent; Mrs. Alexander Bell, chaplain; Dr. Ella R. Fales, recording secretary; Mrs. Arthur C. Houghton, corresponding secretary; Mrs. C. C. Hoffner, treasurer; Mrs. Minnie A. Tull, assistant treasurer; Mrs. Roger Williams, registrar; Mrs. Tonnis J. Holzberg, historian, and Mrs. Edwin P. Andrus, librarian.

District historical committee of the D. A. R. will meet for a dinner-lecture, Thursday evening, December 14, in St. Stevens Parish Hall at Sixteenth and Newton streets northwest.

The dinner will be served at 6:30 by the ladies of St. Stevens Parish. Immediately following, Mrs. Jasper Marion Beall, state chairman of the filing and lending bureau, will talk on "Colonial Williamsburg."

Mrs. Tonnis J. Holzberg, chairman of the historical committee, and Mrs. Beall, are in charge of arrangements. Mrs. Edwin J. Ryan, 1368 Spring road, northwest, is in charge of reservations.

The Gentler Sex

By Malvina Lindsay,

Character Analyst

"You know, Miss Grubb, I see something about you that I'll bet you've never guessed. You have a dual personality! Yes! Now the world doesn't see the real YOU. You hide it! Very few people in your life have ever really known you—that is the YOU deep down inside.

"You know at heart you're really a very lonely person. Yes! But let me tell you something—superior people are always very lonely. . . . Yes, that's the price we have to pay.

"Say, tell me one thing—do you get very discouraged at times? . . . I thought so! And you have spells of being moody, don't you? . . . And thinking people don't understand or appreciate you? . . . And just wondering what it's all about? . . . I knew it! Neptune people are all that way.

"You know what you ought to do for that? You ought to go back to Mother Earth. You love Nature, don't you? Well, then, if you could get a little place in the country and start rearing chickens—or even vegetables—as a diversion after office hours, it would do a lot for you. Or, if you can't do that, I'll tell you what you might do! You might try walking barefoot in the park!

"Another thing I can see in you is that you have a great love of the beautiful. You love to have beautiful things aroud you—beautiful furnishings, antiques, objects d'art. You love to wear beautiful clothes, beautiful jewels. Yes! That's the Croesus influence.

"You love music, too, don't you? . . . And art? . . . And poetry? . . . And the theater? . . . Yes, I can see that you're very artistic. But you've never expressed your artistic talents. Hasn't anyone ever told you you might have been a writer? . . . Or an actress? . . . Or an opera singer? . . . You know, Miss Grubb, I think definitely you have the personality for an opera singer.

Now, the whole trouble with you, as I see it, is lack of self-confidence. It's the only reason you haven't climbed to the heights. You underestimate yourself. You stand back and let other persons who don't have half your talents push you aside. You just don't know how to sell yourself. Atlas people are all like that.

"I can see one thing, though. You have a great talent for getting along with people. . . . You make friends easily. But let me tell you something—you do too much for them. . . . Yes, you put yourself out too much for other people. . . . I know all about that. I'm that way myself.

"You're very sensitive aren't you? . . . And you have a great deal of intuition? . . . Yes! You know, I wouldn't be surprised if you didn't have psychic power.

"Say, now, I don't want to embarrass you by getting too personal, but at some time in your life haven't you had rather a serious disappointment in—well, shall we say your love life? . . . I thought so! You know for all that you're an intellectual type you have a very emotional side to your nature.

"The trouble, though, with you is that you hide your feeling too much. Yes! You're too timid—especially in relationship with men. Now, you attract men—oh yes you do! That's the Circe influence. . . . But you're too cold to them.

"Tell me, now, don't you know a lot of women far less attractive than yourself who have hordes of men running after them? . . . Well, they have merely developed their Venus auras. Now all that you need to do is to develop your self-confidence and to learn to intensify your Venus aura. A lot of that can be done through breath control—as I explain in the lecture series I am opening next week on Magnetic Control.

"Of course, I'm in this business merely to help people—my work is entirely noncommercial, as I explain in this pamphlet. . . . What? Oh yes, I know your must be very busy, but the whole thing is—this course will entirely change your life! . . . Yes! Why, you'll even have a lot more time.

"Yes, I have any number of pupils whose lives have been completely changed by this course. They've found opportunities, jobs, increased finances—why, even desirable husbands—what? . . . Oh, yes, there are a few more vacancies in the class. Yes, I'll be glad to enroll you. . . . The fee? . . . Only $25."

Success Story in Gloves

Saucy and gay as the rooster's cap are the shortie gloves the model above wears with a striped flannel town and country frock. The hat may be too pert for all tastes but the gloves are smart for any age or hand size. They are French washable doeskins, cut as short as the law allows by their designer, Kislav of Paris

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes.

Diana Barrymore Called by Father John His Greatest Production on Occasion Of Their Recent Meeting in Chicago

New York, Dec. 3.

THAT WAS A fascinating story out of Chicago about the meeting of John Barrymore and his 18-year-old daughter, Diana. He is out there clowning his way through a piece called "My Dear Children," while young Diana had arrived to appear in the revival of that great play, "Outward Bound," and I mean great.

Alice Hughes

John's family ties have come and gone with relatively slight to-do. Diana is the daughter of his second wife, best known by her pen name of Michael Strange. Elaine Barrie (or Jacobs) was No. 4. He has seen Diana but a few times since she was a baby; Diana has never seen him act at all. It's rather tragic that she will see her father for the first time in his current manifestation as a buffoon, rather than in the great days of his colorful Hamlet.

We know the girl well around here. She made her debut last fall, and was much sought after. She's pretty, but looks much more like her Aunt Ethel than her father. There was only one thing she wanted to do—be an actress, and she lost no time. She's doing the right thing, too, trouping the country as she learns her trade, just like her cousin, Ethel Barrymore Colt.

And now she and her pappy meet, as fellow actors. He was delighted to see her, called her "Slug," sat with her for hours in a night club, and praised her. "I worked like a dog on 'Hamlet'," he is reported as saying, "but she's my greatest production."

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—I howl like a hyena over a story about the Metropolitan Opera, now open a week. The place is flat broke, and unless the plug hats and tiaras kick in a huge sum by the middle of this month, the old bird house will be sold under the hammer. And today the swells who "own" the boxes are hollering murder because they fear the rabble will buy their way into the boxes. Poor souls—how they suffer! Opera bores most of them sound asleep, but they still value their place as a showcase on certain nights. That's what happens to grand opera when it is a private enterprise and not a governmental project for its music-loving citizens, as it is, or was, in the old world and in nations to the south.

The old canary cage pulled a nice press stunt for its opening, though. Elizabeth Rethberg, who sang in the opening opera, sent a pair of tickets to a waitress named Marion McCarthy who had given her good service and conversation at one of our popular-priced eating houses. Nice going—sounds like Ringling's was in town again!

YESTERDAY I saw Yehudi Menuhin, the violin genius, and his wife strolling through Central Park. And the great fiddler was pushing the go-cart containing his first born, just like any other New York pappy.

Your Figure, Madame!

Discouraging Setbacks Are Declared the Rule in Reducing

By Ida Jean Kain

WHEN YOUR DIET gets you down only in spirits you may imagine that you are one in a thousand and cannot reduce. But these discouraging setbacks are the rule rather than the exception. No one ever slims down without experiencing a few dark moments over the wild caperings of the scales.

If you are marking time, this letter should cheer you up:

"One of your columns is almost a personal reply to a letter I wrote recently. At that time I had struck a snag and couldn't seem to get past. But somehow I kept on with my diet and, sure enough, 3 pounds dropped off before the next weighing. I am down to only 136 pounds—only one one more to go!

"Whenever I feel like candy or any of the other tempting fatteners, I look at a photo taken last summer. That's all I need! May I give you my thanks? Perhaps to you this is just a way of earning a living, but to me it was a constant help."

Well, I like my way of earning my bread and butter! Especially when letters like that come in!

Standstill Is Normal

Here's someone who is at a standstill . . . "In the past nine months I have lost 60 pounds and weigh 138. But I find that I cannot lose any more weight no matter how I try. And I can gain a pound just by looking at food!"

Anyone who lost that much weight in so short a time should be content to hold her own for two or three months. Normally, the weight may vary a couple of pounds overnight, so the registration of a solitary pound extra doesn't mean a thing. However, nobody gains weight just by looking at food, and when the calorie intake is held down to actual requirements there is no danger of the scales continuing to climb.

During this period daily exercise is of the utmost importance. It will not only help to stabilize the weight at the new low level but also will improve the measurements from week to week. Following a stabilization period of at least two months the low caloric menus may be resumed.

Exercise Gets Results

When the trouble is with measurements, diet is not the answer. If yours is the narrow-shouldered, broad-hipped type of figure you will be keenly interested in this reducer's report . . . "Dieting makes me thinner in the bust, chest and shoulders—where I can't afford to lose! But thanks to special exercise I have begun to carry my shoulders erect, my bust measurement has increased several inches in a few months and I have taken off several inches from my hips and thighs."

If you would like to make a similar improvement in your measurements, here is an exercise that gets results:

Glove Counters Are Laden With Gifts

Piquant Shorties, 6 and 12 Button Type Offer Gay Choice

By Marshall Adams,
The Post Fashion Editor.

FROM our recent tours through holly-trimmed glove counters we gather that one of the gayest glove Christmases of all time will be had this year. From France and the bright young designers in Manhattan have come the piquant daytime shorties, the smooth afternoon six-button gloves for candle-lit hours.

Marshall Adams

Few gifts are more widely appreciated than wisely chosen gloves, bought with the individual's wardrobe and habits in mind. For the tailored outdoor girl who does her own driving and dashing about there are neatly walled and hand-turned Daniel Hayes and Aris gloves in kid, capeskin and suede, often in combinations of several materials. For the classic minded, there is no glove known that has more appeal in its extreme simplicity than the Kislav doeskin. Faithful devotees of this hard-wearing, washable glove are praising Allah and the ships that are still bringing Kislav's softly colored gloves from France.

Fur Trimmings

For glamourtime, afternoon "authentic" gloves tipped with silver fox or trimmed with balls, strips or buttons of mink and Persian are amusing novelties as gifts—maybe just the right spice for girls with fur pillboxes and untrimmed winter coats that need popping up.

Reptile slid into the Christmas scene also, and surprisingly low priced are the trig suede gloves with their lizard and snakeskin cuffs. There are short gloves of bright soft antelope with gathers at the side, ending in coy bows. For dressier clothes, La Valle, one of the really superior French glove designers, has evolved a popular afternoon glove of black suede with turned-back cuffs gleaming with rows of gold clips. They give an apron-front effect that exactly follows the line of the apron used by La Valle for his matching shoes and handbag.

For extra gala wear there are 12-button gloves in kid and antelope without bursts of sequins or spirals of diamente workmanship sprawled the full length of the glove. These are superb with little black Christmas Eve dinner suits. Certainly the most amusing glove for festive cocktail hours is the short Pigal (abitrous yellow) suede with gold kid designs scrolled into a perfect pretzel's shape.

Play Production Self-Taught

AN EXCITING TIME—when your group is putting on a play! Will it be a success, bringing glory to everyone? Or will it have those mistakes of directing, acting and production that shout "amateur?"

What to do, what not to do become simple with a little professional knowledge.

Before calling rehearsals, the director should make a floor plan for each scene. An unsymmetrical floor plan is better than a rectangular one. It is more pictorial—and permits easier plotting of the action. Furniture should be placed according to the same unsymmetrical lines—not at right angles to the footlights.

Now, with plans ready, the director calls rehearsals, plans the action and grouping of the actors. With director and cast alert, it is easy to avoid such mistakes as that shown in our picture.

There you see the actors standing in a straight line. Stage grouping should be based on a triangular arrangement—as indicated by the dots in our floor plan—rather than on a straight line or semi-circle. The actor who is the center of interest at a given moment should be at the triangle's apex.

Of course, to make your play a rousing success, the production staff must be on its toes, too. What are the duties of this staff? Of the various backstage crews?

Send 15 cents in coins for our booklet, "How To Put On a Play," to The Washington Post, Home Institute, 109 West Nineteenth Street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address, and the name of booklet.

In our new 40-page booklet,

Mary Haworth's Mail

Husband Is Bitterly Critical of Wife's Hefty Figure; She's Short and Weighs 130 Pounds; What to Do?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: When I married 19 years ago, I weighed 85 pounds and was not in the best of health. Today I am the mother of three children, weigh 130 pounds and enjoy good health. I am only 5 feet tall, and while I appreciate that I am too fat for my height, I can truthfully say (and many agree) that I do not look a fright. I like to eat and come from a long line of fat people on both sides. However, I exercise regularly and if I do say so myself, I don't think I look too fat because I am solid, my weight is evenly distributed, I dress with discrimination and wear a good foundation garment.

However, my husband, while a man of sound judgment in many respects, seems to have gone completely crazy on the subject of my weight. He tells me about it daily, points out the fattest people in public places and tells me what I will look like in another year or so. He also says that unless I do something about it I will in time lose a good husband (his opinion), because he could never continue to love a fat woman.

My husband is 6 feet tall and weighs 135 pounds. His mother is almost as tall and weighs 90 pounds. All his brothers and sisters look like living skeletons, although they seem to be in good health and eat enormous meals. I have carried the same weight several years and am not inclined to continuous gains. I have tried going on a diet, without much success, and no success at all so far as appetite and disposition are concerned. I am not a big eater, but I do like fattening things in moderation and try always to eat sensibly, planning well-balanced meals for the family.

I feel that my husband is making a mountain out of a molehill and my irritation toward him is growing daily. I should hate to break up my home over such a small matter, but really, Miss Haworth, you have no idea how disagreeable it is to be on the receiving end of a continuous stream of criticism, ridicule and cutting remarks. I am getting fed up with it. Even my little girl said to her father the other day, "Daddy, why are you always picking on mother? I think she is nice just as she is."

My husband picked up a movie magazine recently, turned to a picture of Joan Blondell and said to me: "Now look at her. She'd had two children. But she's smart. She wouldn't let herself look like you." I went to a doctor about a month ago and had a check-up. He told me I had a bit of thyroid trouble, but nothing serious and otherwise was in good health. I told him how my husband had been taking on about my size and he said just to laugh it off. But I can't. I don't think any woman would appreciate her husband looking enviously at other men's sylph-like wives and comparing her with every oversize monstrosity under the sun. I am at my wits' end and I hope you can save my sanity. Thank you.

MARGARET.

The Man's a Fool, But Shave Your Waist

DEAR MARGARET: Your husband is behaving like a fool, of course, and the real source of his distress is not your sturdy contours, I am sure, but an Indian summer infatuation for some exaggeratedly slim young thing whose image is constantly before his mind's eye. That would explain his latterday fretful criticism of your natural, inevitable and perhaps entirely suitable poundage.

However, no constructive purpose will be served in challenging him for the fool he is; nor in pointing out the fact that he is not exactly the perfect physical specimen himself; that, far from being a second Adonis, he looks rather more like Ichabod Crane. By giving him critical tit-for-tat, your domestic relationship ould soon degenerate to the human equivalent of an alley cat fight.

Presumably the wisest course you can pursue is to meekly oblige him—if possible—in the matter of streamlining your figure. Moderate exercise and diet faithfully practiced over a period of 6 to 18 months, say, should permanently cut your weight down (with no loss of health) by at least 15 pounds, and your measurements by many inches. I daresay what your husband most objects to is your lack of "willowness" around the middle. That "good foundation garment" in which you place your trust probably adds no grace, but gives you the appearance, merely, of a perfectly stuffed sausage.

Naturally, you would want to get your physician's "okay" on whatever exercises were employed, in order to be sure that they were imposing no dangerous organic strain. And you would want to know, too, what fats and starches may be safely eliminated from your diet. It is possible, as you may or may not know, to be perfectly nourished on a diet that does not pile up a residue of bulging fat—which, for the person past 30, is an invariable health hazard, as insurance specialists tell us.

Ida Jean Kain, a national authority on figure control, whose writings appear daily on this page, has said that there is but one solution for the figure "problem" of the "short, stocky" woman, into which classification you undoubtedly fall. She says this type of women simply must go a little hungry. This doesn't mean a faddish, starvation diet, intermittently observed. It means adhering (with your physician's approval) to a straight diet of "protective" foods, and sensible rejection of such tempting nonessentials as gravies, sauces, desserts, etc.

Because of her sturdy structure, the "short, stocky" woman can never reduce to the bantam-weight class. But she can be slim and graceful in appearance, while tipping the scales at 115 and 125 pounds. By proper feeding habits, she can eliminate rolls of fat around the waist; and by proper exercises she can (a) distribute her weight firmly and symmetrically all over, and (b) introduce a lithe stretch to the middle of her figure, in particular. Most women past their girlhood incline to "settle" toward the hips, simply because they don't retain, either involuntarily or deliberately, a lilting skyward lift of mind and body—which together constitute the elusive suggestion of "eternal youth" which romantically minded men pine for.

I suggest that you become a faithful follower of Miss Kain's advice on figure control. She graphically describes exercises for streamlining overweight that is general or localized; and also supplies menus which are said to maintain health at minimum calory intake. Start reading her today and follow her recommendations until your figure is perfection of its kind, in weight, proportion and posture.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post's Woman's Page.

Mrs. Heins to Present 'The Other Wise Man'

Mrs. C. P. Heins, who wrote and directed the historical pageant for Arlington County last spring, will present a dramatization of Van Dyke's "The Other Wise Man," today at 2:45 in the Arlington Presbyterian Church on Columbia pike as the Christmas program of the Arlington Woman's Club. Guests may be invited.

Preceding the program, luncheon will be served at 1 p. m. and a short business meeting will be held.

The cast includes Mrs. Martin Hogan, Mrs. Melvin Pfeiffer, Mrs. Milton Payne, Mrs. J. H. White, Mrs. George Simpson, Mrs. C. P. Cake, Mrs. G. H. Hieronymus, Mrs. J. H. Brewer, Mrs. A. L. Handy, Mrs. J. T. Wallace, Mrs. Carlton Duffus and Mrs. Walter Wolf. Mrs. J. S. Wilson will be the accompanist.

Today's Health Talk

Device to Measure Pain Sensitivity Held Needed

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

I have several times suggested that an instrument which the medical profession needs very much is an esthiometer, which would measure pain as a thermometer measures temperature.

Pain is the most frequent symptom which brings a patient to his physician, but the physician has no way of measuring the amount of pain. He has to take the patient's word for it.

Dr. Charles Mayo used to have a story of a young man who demoralized the medical profession in a village by sending a man, coached for the part, around to pose as a patient. To the first doctor he went to see he described exactly the symptoms of ulcer of the stomach. The doctor made an examination, but since there was no way to check an ulcer history exactly he told the man he had an ulcer of the stomach. The pseudo-patient asked him to write this opinion out, which he did.

He then went to doctor No. 2 and described the symptoms of gallstones. Doctor No. 2 gave him a written certificate that he had gallstones. Then he went to doctor No. 3 and described exactly the symptoms of a kidney stone, and doctor No. 3 gave him a certificate saying that he had a kidney stone. Then he attached his photograph to each of these opinions and took them around to the three doctors, showing it was the same man with three opinions, and threatened a suit.

I have even projected a little romance about the esthiometer by suggesting what the effect would be on such a village. It would probably be found that the chronic sufferer who had "the worst headache in the world" would have practically no pain at all, while the poor woman who was supporting a family by taking in washing would really have the worst pain.

A new device, invented by Dr. Edward Hollander, is a gauge for pain sensitivity. It is used in connection with a blood pressure gauge. A small elliptical metal grater is fitted inside the blood pressure cuff. The cuff is inflated slowly and as the pressure is increased the prongs of the grater indent but do not puncture the skin. When the grater causes the patient to wince, the blood pressure is taken.

In examining a large group of patients, it was found that 27 per cent were hypersensitive to pain, 29 per cent had a lower threshold for pain sensitivity, while about 44 per cent were normal in that they winced at the pressure of the grater at about the level of 120 mm. of mercury.

2 Pedestrians Hurt By Hit-Run Drivers; 5 Others Injured In Sunday Crashes

Traffic accidents took the seventy-eighth District victim of the year yesterday with the death of Christopher C. Harris, 55, general delivery clerk at the Main Postoffice, of 2149 California street northwest.

Harris was struck by a taxi at California street and Columbia road northwest as he stepped from a safety zone. He suffered a skull fracture and compound fracture of the leg. He died in Emergency Hospital.

Hit-run drivers injured two pedestrians here yesterday.

Morris Bankerwitz, 57, of 794 M street northwest, was treated at Georgetown Hospital for leg injuries after a collision near his home. Anna Fischer, 36, of 1511 Isherwood street northwest, was treated for a broken collar bone, and Nelson Brown, 38, of 2214 Q street southeast, was treated for abrasions at Casualty following a collision at Twelfth and C streets southeast.

Hurt in Front of Home

James Young, 10, of 128 F street southeast, suffered a fractured left leg, shock and bruises when he was struck by an automobile in front of his home yesterday afternoon. Police charged George Goodwin, 26, of 1248 Twentieth street northwest, who they said was driving the automobile, with having no operator's permit.

Treated at Sibley Hospital for a fractured wrist and lacerations of the head was Beatrice Watson, 39, of 1210 Twelfth street northwest, a passenger in an auto in a collision in the 2900 block of Bladensburg road northeast.

While crossing the street in the 900 block of New Jersey avenue northwest, Catherine Smith, 26, colored, of 76 Defrees street northwest, was struck by a hit-run motorist. She was treated for lacerations at Freedmen's Hospital.

William Henderson, 28, of Old Ironsides, Md., suffered a compound fracture of the leg when he was struck down by a hit-run driver while standing beside his auto on the road between Old Ironsides and Liverpool, Md. He was treated at Providence Hospital.

The Rev. T. R. Sanford, 61, of Luray, Va., Baptist minister, was in an improved condition in the Richmond Memorial Hospital yesterday, according to the Associated Press. Sanford was in a three-car collision Saturday night on the Washington-Richmond highway about 3 miles south of Ashland, Va.

Native of Arkansas

In the fatal accident Harris was on a family errand before taking his wife, Mrs. Helen Clara Harris Harris, to Calvary Baptist Church for morning services, relatives said.

Besides his wife, he is survived by three sons, Christopher C. Harris, jr., of Buckingham, Va.; Theron A. Harris, 522 Decatur street northwest, and Hillman C. Harris, 2149 California street northwest.

A native of Formas, Ark., he was educated in the public schools of Arkansas and attended the State university.

Harris came to Washington in 1920 and had been employed in the post office since.

Traffic Maps Urged

Distribution of small traffic maps and charts to parents of school children is being urged by the Keystone Automobile Club.

Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer has been asked to use part of the traffic safety and education funds for preparation and distribution of the maps and charts, George E. Keneipp, Keystone Club manager, announced yesterday.

Busy Thieves Get $100 in Cash And 50 Batteries

Bandits, purse snatchers and burglars collected more than $100 in cash and property whose value was not estimated in a series of depredations yesterday.

Lillian H. Clark, of 454 New Jersey avenue southeast, and Elsie L. Jones, of 624 New York avenue northwest, reported they were robbed of their pocketbooks by two colored boys, one of whom walked with a limp. Frank White, of 617 L street northwest, said he was robbed of $17 by two colored men near his home.

Rosie Anderson, of 3 Fort drive northeast, reported she was robbed of $81 hidden in a spectacle case which, in turn, was thrust under a piano. Daniel Collen, proprietor of a storage yard at 1102 Eleventh street southeast, asked police to look out for 50 batteries from his establishment.

Crew Man Feared Lost Overboard From River Dredge

Police last night entered their sixtieth hour of search for William H. Snively, 27, lineman on the dredge Pennsylvania at Gravelly Point, believed lost overboard early Friday.

Snively was last seen that day at 430 a. m. by Alvin Gorman, of the Pennsylvania's crew, who told police he saw the lineman walking along the dredge's discharge pipe, repairing wire. When Snively failed to report when his shift went off duty, police were notified.

Snively's wife, Mrs. Mae Snively, of 55 Bates street northwest, has visited the airport project several times in search of news. The couple has a 2-year-old daughter, Patricia Ann.

D. C. Man Safe As Train Hits Stalled Auto

Leaps or Is Pulled From Machine Stuck On Bates Crossing

Royal E. Olmert, 21, of 741 Aspen street northwest, nursed a scratched nose yesterday after his automobile was wrecked by a B. & O. express train which roared into it at Bates Crossing just before dawn.

Olmert, sitting in the automobile attempting to extricate it from the tracks, leaped or was pulled to safety a few seconds before the train charged into the crossing at what police estimated to be 80 miles an hour. Bates Crossing is the only grade crossing remaining in the District.

According to Olmert, his automobile stalled on the track and he went to a firehouse to seek aid. When he returned, he said, police were there attempting to tow the machine from the tracks and when their tow rope parted, he made an effort to drive the car off. He said he leaped to the ground unaided just before the train struck.

Police Private Francis L. Gaver, of Twelfth Precinct, said he and his partner, D. L. Moore, went in response to a radio call and found the automobile with its front end in a ditch and the rear on the southbound tracks. Gaver said he attempted to pull the car free while Moore held back a curious crowd and Olmert sat in the automobile.

Gaver said he pulled Olmert clear just before the train struck. The engineer said he saw flares along the track placed by Gaver but was unable to stop.

Olmert was released on $500 bond after being charged at Twelfth Precinct station with driving while drunk.

Jefferson's Cave Found in Virginia

Winchester, Va., Dec. 3.—Walter S. Amos, of this city, has written Dr. C. W. Gilmore, curator of the Smithsonian Institution, that he has located a cavern explored by Thomas Jefferson and which provided the third President with material for the first article on paleontology published in the United States, 1799.

The cavern is within a short distance of this city, but Amos withheld the location until scientists can explore it. According to information Amos forwarded Dr. Gilmore, Jefferson found in the cave fossil remains of what he described as a "gigantic, cat-like animal."

Elks Lodge Pays Tribute To 38 Dead

E. S. Muller Delivers Memorial Address At H Street Hall

Washington Lodge No. 15 of the Elks last night paid tribute to 38 brother members who died in the last year. Edwin S. Muller past exalted ruler of St. Louis lodge, now a member of the Washington chapter, delivered the memorial address.

Taking for his theme the four attributes, charity, justice, brotherly love and fidelity, Muller declared "those who are gone should be remembered not as shadows, but as the living friends we knew." He likened the deceased to Shakespeare's world of "stage and players," saying "they have played the last great role of death."

A lighted cross in the H street hall symbolized the dead, with 38 purple lights. The Elks' Boys Band played selections. Ambrose A. Durkin and Frank A. Dougherty sang and Eugenia Bodkin gave a violin solo, accompanied by John S. M. Zimmerman at the organ.

Those memorialized were: William G. Morgan, Frank Earl Endres, John W. Work, Charles B. Hobbs, Rev. Thomas A. Walsh, William J. Devine, Lee B. Emory, Alexander H. Bell, George B. Miller, Thomas A. Murray, James J. Sheahan, Gus A. Schuldt, Edward S. Schmid, Albert D. Esher, Thomas A. Ellis, Henry C. Cleve, Harry R. Howser, George H. Nowell, William A. Thornton, Archie L. Hutton, Thomas A. Cannon, jr., Charles H. Raymond, Lars L. Mortensen, Maurice A. Joyce, Lloyd H. Johnson, Joseph H. Deering, Russell F. Kinsey, Frederick O. Roman, Samuel D. Gibson, Collin Peebles, August C. Radue, Frank McDermot, James A. Hurley, Andrew J. Johnston, Ross P. Andrews, Percival H. Marshall, Casper Waldvogel, David J. Kaufman, Frank Tavenner and Frank Rose.

Nine Choirs Join in Joyous Hymns Celebrating Advent

Famous Schola Cantorum of New York Leads 800 Singers in Episcopal Program; Congregation Takes Part

Led by Hugh Ross, noted director of the Schola Cantorum, of New York City, 800 singers from nine Episcopal congregations and choirs last night met for an inspiring hymnfest here, climaxing Advent Sunday, "New Year's day" in the church.

While the mass program, centered at Ascension Episcopal Church, Twelfth and Massachusetts avenue northwest, held the spotlight of attention, individual churches commemorated Advent with corporate and Congregational Communion, appropriate music and sermons accented by spiritual resolve for the coming year.

White-cassocked, trained choristers joined with the audience in the program at Ascension Church, where hymns reminiscent of the world-changing event in a Bethlehem manger were sung in ways unique to many people.

Prof. Ross, who a few years ago conducted local performances of Mozart's "Requiem" and Vaughton's "Bethlehem," led a service which brought out the dominant qualities of voice and material.

Congregation Sings, Too

He emphasized, and demonstrated, in such sturdy hymns of the church as "O Come All Ye Faithful;" "O Come, O Come, Emmanuel;" "We Three Kings of the Orient Are," and others, that full co-operation of choir and congregation is necessary in producing an evening of church music that is uplifting and enjoyable.

Among his many suggestions for improving the quality of such music, and creating a better appreciation of such, was that singers should try to relive the original idea which motivated the composition of a hymn or anthem.

He pointed out his experience had shown that the average church audience leaves the singing to the choir, but before last night's program had come to a close he had skillfully coached the audience into the genuine spirit of mass singing.

The Rev. Raymond L. Wolven, minister in charge of the host church, presided at the service, in which Epiphany, Ascension, St. Alban's, Trinity (Takoma Park), Grace (Woodside), St. Colomba's, All Souls' Memorial, St. Thomas' and St. Margaret's churches took part. Dr. Charlotte Klein, of St. Margaret's, was at the console. Dr. Charles B. Warner, St. Alban's rector, gave the invocation. The Right Rev. James E. Freeman was unable to attend, as he had planned.

It was "Happy Birthday to You" for Dr. F. J. Bohanan, rector of historic St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Rock Creek Parish. Members of the church school gave him flowers and other gifts at the morning school program. Cash gifts were turned over to the Episcopal Eye, Ear and Throat Hospital by the rector, who has been interested in the project for many years.

Guest speaker at St. Paul's was the Rev. Henry A. McNulty, head of the Soochow Academy, Soochow, China. In America on furlough, he said there must be no let up in the missionary work in that land, in spite of the war there. The Rev. Charles W. Wood, assistant rector, also took part.

Being a Christian involves a spiritual interpretation of life, a complete unselfishness and sacrificial love and moral goodness, the Rev. Alvin Lamar Wills said at the Episcopal Church of Our Saviour, Brookland. Earlier in the day, Louis N. Denit, attorney, addressed the breakfast following the annual corporate communion for men and boys.

St. John's Lafayette Square; St. Thomas', worship place of President Roosevelt; St. Paul's, near Washington Circle; Epiphany, the Washington Cathedral and other Episcopal churches joined with other denominations in the Advent celebration.

Building Drive Begun

Attention also was focused on Albright Memorial Evangelical Church's launching of its $25,000 building drive; Calvary Baptist Church Christian Endeavor's golden jubilee observance; Hyattsville Presbyterian Church's 235th anniversary fete; the fifth anniversary celebration of Christ Lutheran Church, Bethesda, and other events.

In Argentina, church and state are bound together by the country's constitution rather than separated by it as in the United States, Dr. Almon R. Wright, associate classifier in the National Archives, told the Adult Forum at the Universalist National Memorial Church yesterday morning.

"The federal government and the Catholic Church in Argentina have been guided in their relations with each other largely by two provisions of the federal constitution of that country," he said. "The first of these is that which confers the "patronage" of the church upon the civilian officials of the government. The second is that which prescribes the support of the church by the government.

"For nearly 90 years the appointment of the higher dignitaries of the church has rested to a large extent with the Senate of the republic. Questions concerning these appointments have involved the country in disputes with the papacy and have caused friction between Senate and the President, but rarely have choices been made unworthy of the religious character of the offices."

Amphibian's Crew Tells of Night Adrift on Waves

Salem, Mass., Dec. 3 (AP).—A story of a "lucky landing" on the choppy Atlantic Ocean was told tonight by four Coast Guardsmen as their $60,000 amphibian plane, battered by waves, was towed into Rockport Harbor after drifting since late yesterday.

They revealed they had reached a point over land on their return to the service's air base here from a routine patrol flight but that, darkness and dwindling of fuel had forced them to go 16 miles out to sea so they could alight.

Lieut. Comdr. Roy L. Raney, in charge of the flight, described it as a "lucky landing"—without damage on a rough sea.

'We Wuz Robbed,' Crowd Chants in Ovation to Heroes

o'clock, when the trains from New York with returning fans began pulling in.

By the time the team arrived at least 11,000 who saw the game had straggled into the concourse, and most of them waited to greet the defeated Redskins, not with derision but with ringing cheers.

The train bringing the team was 45 minutes late and between 10:55, when it was due, until 11:40, when it rolled into the station, the fans kept themselves happy in undergrduate fashion. To keep warm, to please news photographers, to follow impromptu cheer leaders and just for the fun of it, they screamed, sang, yelled and acted as though they were waiting for a team of conquering heroes.

It might have been homecoming day on any one of a thousand campuses in any part of the land.

Those fans who poured endlessly from the arriving trains seemed to have one goal in common. As soon as they set foot in the concourse they made straight for newsboys and bought and bought them out of early morning papers to see photographs of the football game which had lifted them to the heights of hope at the Polo Grounds and then dropped them flat to earth again.

When the team got in at last, the fans went wild and an extra police detail of 25 men found themselves with their hands full, making way for regular passengers who found their trains with considerable difficulty.

Most of their enthusiasm went for Turk Edwards, Bo Russell, Ed Justice, Ray Flaherty and Sammy Baugh, and those battered gentlemen were considerably manhandled by autograph hunters. A majority of the other players made their escape by the simple expedient of pulling their hats over their eyes, turning up their overcoat collars and ducking out through side entrances.

Writer Says War Might Last 15 Years

Asserts Nazis Can't Win Without Reds; Blames Chamberlain

Vincent Sheean, war correspondent and author, last night predicted the war in Western Europe might last 10 or 15 years and said Germany could not hope to win without aid of Russia.

He said a major portion of responsibility for the war rested in British Prime Minister Chamberlain's "timorous" policy of appeasement. Sheean added he was convinced Chamberlain—and the French government—would have consented to another Munich rather than fight for Poland if the temper of the British people hadn't forced his hand.

The author of "Personal History" and "Not Peace But a Sword" spoke before 600 persons attending the second session of the National Temple Forum, at Washington Hebrew Congregation, 816 Eighth street northwest.

Differences Only Theoretical

Among his observations, Sheean said:

There are only theoretical distinctions between German Fascism and Russian Communism; practically, they are the same.

Russia in accepting the Nazi theory that small states have no rights insofar as the big states are involved, administered the "crowning blow" of disillusionment to those who believed in the "democratic future of the socialistic state."

The Soviet's invasion of Finland is part of the agreement to divide Europe arranged in the Nazi-Russian friendship pact of September 29.

Italy, whether she likes the idea or not, will have to maintain for the time being a benevolent neutrality toward Germany.

Britain not only is fighting for freedom of the English but also for her empire, i. e., the right to refuse freedom to other people, like the millions in India; France likewise.

Chamberlain helped or stood by without protest when Hitler grabbed the Rhineland, Austria, Sudetenland, Czecho-Slovakia; and he actually handed Spain to the Fascists.

Britain Gave Hitler His Chance

Speaking in a matter-of-fact tone, overlaid with sarcasm, Sheean outlined events leading to the Nazi invasion of Poland and the parts played by Chamberlain, former Prime Minister Baldwin and the British Tory government.

Despite protests of France, Britain gave Hitler his first chance at scrapping provisions of the Versailles Treaty when she negotiated an Anglo-German naval agreement in 1935, although England, and the world, knew by this time the Fuehrer was arming for war or the threat of war, the journalist asserted.

The following year London, Sheean said, vetoed a French move to halt German occupation of the Rhineland, where the Nazis built the Siegfried Line.

Both France and England winked when the Nazis took over Austria, he averred.

Blames British in Spain

The British foreign office, according to Sheean, invented the nonintervention pact, which barred the "legally elected" republican government of Spain from purchasing supplies while Germany and Italy continued to aid the insurgents under Generalissimo Franco, assuring a Fascist victory. The veteran newspaperman attributed British action to Chamberlain's fear Spain would fall under Communist control unless Franco won.

"As for Czecho-Slovakia, Chamberlain never intended to put up a fight for it," Sheean declared. "He told a group of newspapermen so only a short time before Munich. The surrender at Munich smashed the Anglo-French system of alliances in Europe and drove Russia into an alliance with Germany."

Hitler reached the height of his power in the Czech crisis when Chamberlain personally planned the flying trips to Germany to "get his orders" from the Fuehrer, the correspondent said. For Hitler it was an "unexampled triumph" in German history, but Chamberlain was humiliated, although "apparently" he didn't recognize the fact, he added.

Sheean scored Chamberlain for disregarding his cabinet and foreign minister in his dealings with Hitler, although he had little understanding of Hitler and the European situation.

The speaker asserted Hitler was now "absolutely dependent" on Stalin. The economic and social systems under both are practically the same, Sheean insisted, with "the mass of people in slavery" and exploitation by special privileged groups.

Should the Allies continue their defensive tactics on the Western Front, the war is likely to run for 10 or 15 years, Sheean predicted. Fear of wiping out civilization in western Europe, he added, has thus far held up the expected mass bombings of open cities.

16 Groups To Discuss Government

D. C. Reorganization Is Major Theme as 8 Associations of Citizens Meet Tonight

District government reorganization is the principal theme of 16 citizens' associations holding their monthly meetings this week. Eight associations will meet tonight and the remainder are scheduled later in the week.

Discussion of local government reorganization by member associations this week follows an attack on the Kennedy reorganization bill as "even worse than the Seal plan" at a session of the Federation of Citizens Associations Saturday night. The associations' delegates at the Saturday meeting approved the stand of the executive committee in demanding suffrage at the Commissioners' hearings on the Seal plan.

Would Increase Taxes

Officials admitted Saturday that the Seal plan would mean increased expenses to taxpayers. Stating that the municipal government would function more efficiently and would provide better services, they said either reorganization plan would entail a larger yearly outlay.

The District recreational set-up will be discussed at a meeting of the Forest Hills Citizens Association at the Ben W. Murch School, Thirty-sixth and Davenport streets northwest, at 8 p. m. today. Mrs. Prentiss Willson, president of the District Mothers Health Association, will speak on "Family Planning."

Dupont Circle Citizens Association members will hear John Nolen, director of Planning of the National Park Service, speak at their meeting at 4:30 p. m. today in the Pan-American Room at the Mayflower Hotel.

Georgetown Group to Meet

"Shall we favor a chief investigator for every department of the District government?" will be discussed by the Progressive Citizens Association of Georgetown at 8 p. m. at the Curtis School. Whether to separate the city budget from control of the Federal Bureau of the Budget also will be discussed. Lieut. Albert I. Bullock, of Precinct No. 7, will speak on cooperation between police and citizens.

Special entertainment will feature the meeting of the Manor Park Citizens Association at 8 p. m. at the Whittier School, Fifth and Sheridan streets northwest. Reorganization will be discussed at a meeting of the Takoma Park (D. C.) Citizens Association at the Takoma (D. C.) Elementary School, Piney Branch road and Dahlia street northwest.

Other citizens' associations meeting tonight include the [illegible] Association, at the [illegible] School; the Metropolitan [illegible] sociation, at the Cro[illegible] School, and the Michigan [illegible] sociation, at the Bunker Hill

To Discuss Sales Tax

A resolution indorsing the [illegible] tax for the District will be introduced at a meeting of the Columbia Heights Citizens Association tomorrow at 8 p. m. at the Mount Pleasant Congregational Church, 1410 Columbia road northwest. The Randle Highlands Association meets at the Benjamin Orr School, and the North Cleveland Park Association meets at Wisconsin avenue and Windom place northwest tomorrow night.

Meeting Wednesday evening is the Friendship Association at the Jenney School. The Bradbury Heights Association meets Thursday at the Bradbury Heights Methodist Church; the Connecticut Avenue Association at All Souls Memorial Church, and the Washington Highland group meets on the same evening.

The Brightwood Citizens Association meets at the Paul Junior High School, Eighth and Nicholson streets northwest, Friday at 8 p. m.

Hagerstown Man's Body Is Identified

Front Royal, Va., Dec. 3 (AP).—The body of a man found in a clump of trees three miles south of here Friday was identified today as that of Worth Stanley, of Hagerstown, Md.

The identification was made by a niece who said Stanley's wife and son live at Hagerstown. A brother was said to live in Shenandoah City.

Nelson B. Bell About the Showshops

"The Tower of London," Museum of Dark Deeds

New Film at Keith's Stars Basil Rathbone; Charles Butterworth, Judy Starr for Earle; News Notes and Gossip of the Theater

IN "THE TOWER OF LONDON," which on Saturday fulfilled an impetuous booking on the screen at RKO-Keith's Theater, Universal has contrived a new sort of "horror" picture.

Scenarist Robert N. Lee has harked back to the dark deeds of English court life between the years 1471 and 1485 for his plot and peopled it with characters who loom large in Fifteenth Century history. The foremost of these is Richard, Duke of Gloucester, who was to become England's King Richard III through a series of the bloodiest triumphs of treachery over virtue the screen has ever recorded. The action is early pitched to a high note of murderous villainy and seldom recedes from that ominous note.

BELL

It is a quaint conceit of Gloucester's to amuse himself by realigning the miniature figures of those who precede him in succession to the throne in a carefully locked cabinet that serves as a score card of his successful erasure of his nearest relatives by schemes of devilish perfection. The fellow, as he is pictured in Mr. Lee's sanguinary tale, was not always a coward in the execution of his diabolic plots. At times he lured his victims into uneven combat on the field of battle, running them through the middle with his sword and high glee. Others he broke on the torture wracks, drowned in huge vats of their favorite wine or had his man Mord, torture-master and headsman of the Tower, stab in the back while they were at their devotions. Never was his gory ambition curbed by any of the qualms that might afflict the conscience of a noble whose mind was not as warped as his hunchbacked body.

The princelings of King Edward IV and his Queen Elyzabeth, spirited into the Tower and there done away with, were among Richard's minor triumphs in slaughter. Most of his victims were of his own size physically and of superior stature mentally, save in the trifling matter of devising new forms of consanguinary murder.

This, then, is the groundwork of "The Tower of London"—a foundation of desperate deeds that only occasionally are given a superficial coating of sly and disarming dissembling. The key to all the carnage is provided by the strange affinity between Gloucester and the club-footed Mord, who looks upon his master as a god and strives always to curry his favor by perfecting his own skill in human destruction.

This major motif of the play is offset in some degree by the pathetic efforts of Richard's foredoomed victims to shield themselves from the consequences of his insane lust for power and the throne. Even these gentler figures in the melodrama are cast in iron molds. Queen Elyzabeth is vigorously, but futilely played by Barbara O'Neill, who would have been a sort of Lady Macbeth on her own account had she been able to command the means of undoing her kinsman. Ian Hunter's King Edward IV is a jovial scoundrel, not above plotting with his brother, so long as his own immediate household is left out of the scheme of liquidation, and Miles Mander's King Henry IV is a nicely drawn portrait of a regal wreck made an easy catspaw in connivings his broken mind cannot comprehend.

A Uniform Forceful Cast

Stalwart performances are contributed to the unique study in depravity by Vincent Price, as the Duke of Clarence, who came to his end in the wine vat, and Ralph Forbes, as Henry Tudor, waiting across the channel for a chance to right all of the wrongs being done in his native land. John Sutton also helps balance things, as John Wyatt, and Ernest Cossart plays an important minor role as a chimney-sweep who takes an odd part in the court intrigues.

But the major burdens and major credits accrue to Basil Rathbone and Boris Karloff, as Richard and Mord, respectively, the two outrageous gentlemen who give the picture most of its color and all of its terror.

Rowland V. Lee's direction is enthusiastically on the gruesome side and his production lends the play impressiveness by the massiveness and primitive magnificence of its settings.

The supplementary features of the new Keith bill are restricted to a new issue of the Pathe News and one of Walter Lantz' color cartoon comedies, starring Peterkin in "Scrambled Eggs," a satire on nesting time in Birdland. This latter bit of imaginative tomfoolery supplies a welcome antidote to "The Tower of London's" grim blood-letting.

Coming East from Hollywood for the express purpose of fulfilling their engagements as co-headliners of next week's stage bill at the Earle Theater, Charles Butterworth and Judy Starr will inaugurate what is expected to be an extended tour of personal appearances on Thirteenth street next Friday. Harry Anger's new revue will be a sequel to Joe Cook's current "Laugh Factory," bearing the significant title of "Going Wild with Laughs." Mr. Butterworth's droll capabilities as a comic of stage, screen and radio hardly call for expatiation at this time. Miss Starr is an equally popular songstress of the air waves and the phonograph records. Eddie Kane will be the third of Mr. Anger's triumvirate of stars. Incidentally, our native Indiana is being peculiarly favored by the Earle these current weeks. Joe Cook hails from Evansville; Charlie Butterworth from South Bend. The two towns, to be sure, are about as far apart as they could get, within the Hoosier boundaries, but what of it?

Manager Edmond Plohn, of the National, seems to have hit upon the proper solution of return engagements of ace attractions at his opera house. Clare Boothe's "Kiss the Boys Goodbye," with a cast as good as, if not better than, the original, which gave the comedy its premiere performance on the same stage some 14 months ago, ran up a week's gross of almost $12,000 at a price scale that hit a top of $1.65 at night and $1.10 at matinees. That's extremely nice going on any man's circuit.

Phil Lampkin and his orchestra seem to be getting to be a habit with Washington's outlying theaters. Having opened Henry Hiser's rejuvenated Hiser Theater in Bethesda, Sidney Lust's Hyattsville Theater and played the annual dinner and dance for the Variety Club, Phil and his instrumentalists will be heard as a special added attraction at the Buckingham Theater, over in Virginia, on Tuesday and Wednesday nights of this week. Earline King will be his vocalist. In the meantime, Phil is in his twelfth week as "guest conductor" at Izzy Rappaport's Hippodrome Theater in Baltimore. That's also nice going.

After-the-Massacre Note

The Redskins will be guests at Loew's Capitol Theater tonight—minus their scalps.

In Hollywood

Hollywood, Dec. 2.

When Sonja Henie told me she was waking up these mornings in the ermine-upholstered bed that was once occupied by Jean Harlow, I couldn't help think of the likeness, yet vast differences between these two stars. Sonja's story is not like the usual one of so many Hollywood stars, which is from rags to riches. Her Norwegian home is more imposing than any mansion here. In Norway Sonja had a lake in her back yard, and though school was 7 miles away, she frequently skated there. Four majestic pillars stand in the foreground of the house and each is decorated with an emblem symbolic of the members of the family. A wheel motif on one dedicated to her father who was a champion bicyclist. A tennis racket for Sonja's brother, Leif, who was a champ at that game; mother got a rose, she grew prize winners. And, of course, a skate carved on to the pillar in honor of Sonja. Beautiful as it is, the home will be empty until the war is over "over there." Members of the cast love working with Sonja—she's never too tired to be friendly, nor has she lost that sunny disposition And her gifts are lavish.

HOPPER

She took a little extra girl named Belle Richards on her last trip to Norway as her house guest for three months. And Ann Barr, her hairdresser, went with her on her vacation to South America. And when "Everything Happens at Night" finished shooting, Sonja went up to Ann, handed her a little box and said: "Here's something cute I picked up for you." The cute little thing was merely a diamond ring.

And when Jack Warner went to see "The Man Who Came to Dinner" he was so impressed by Michael Harvey, who has a part in that play, went back stage to talk to him, signed him up. Reason Michael didn't leave for Hollywood right away was the necessary two week's notice demanded by Equity. He'll be in "Three Cheers for the Irish."

Madge Evans writes that Walter Winchell may know more about her condition than she does—but as far as she knows—she's not going to have a baby.

Costume designer, Yolanda, has broken the swordfish record at Catalina for the second time. She caught one which weighed 177 pounds. Almost unheard of in this season of the year . . . Sally Rand opens at Florentine Gardens on Christmas day with a new show of gals who are supposed to be eye-openers.

There'll be a follow-up on "Hollywood Cavalcade" and you'll again see the Keystone cops cavorting in "Left at the Altar, or Love in a Pullman Car." Mack Sennett has been signed as technical advisor, Harry Joe Brown as producer. You'll also see Keystone beauties; picture will be partly Technicolor, partly black and white.

A raise—Edgar Kennedy started his movie career as a Keystone cop, so now is in "Charlie McCarthy, Detective" . . . American Nurse's Association has decided to band together to see that nurses are properly portrayed on the screen. First picture to be so supervised is "Vigil in the Night"—one of their members worked in it.

When Jack Warner was at Warm Springs he wanted to see "Elizabeth and Essex," so the theater manager arranged to have it shown. But by the time he arrived, there was a sign out "SRO"—so Jack stood to see his own picture.

Mr. Niven Tries to Palm Something Off!

DAVID NIVEN, BRODERICK CRAWFORD AND LORETTA YOUNG in one of the swankier scenes in "Eternally Yours," the Walter Wanger production, coming to the screen at Loew's Capitol Theater for the week beginning next Friday. Hugh Herbert, Billie Burke, C. Aubrey Smith and ZaSu Pitts also are prominent in the cast

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, Dec. 3.

FORECAST DEPT.: On the day the Nazi-Soviet pact was signed, Earl Browder decided to make a prophecy. "Despite this pact," he told the reporters, "if the Allies declare war against Germany, then Russia will be on their side" . . . Russia then helped Germany dismember Poland . . . When Soviet bombs started dropping over Helsinki the reporters again went to Communist Party headquarters to interview Browder . . . This time, however, he made no prophecies. "Mr. Browder," said his secretary, "will talk only on what has happened—and not on what WILL happen."

WAR DEPT.: Alfred Duff Cooper, the ex-First Lord of the Admiralty, was interviewed by Norman Cousins, who questioned him about the possibility of Great Britain being invaded . . . "That's an impossibility," Duff Cooper assured him, "because Britain is an island" . . . Cousins then reminded him that even a woman succeeded in swimming across the English Channel . . . "Yes," agreed Duff Cooper, "but when she landed she was met by a customs officer—who demanded to know the purpose of her landing on British shores.

SPORTS DEPT.: The page boy at the 21 Club went through the room calling: "Mr. Duff Cooper. Calling Mr. Duff Cooper" . . . Elsa Maxwell stopped the boy and said: "I'm Elsa Maxwell. If you should find Mr. Duff Cooper, tell him I'm giving a party tomorrow night—and that I have a wunnnn-derful new game."

LOST AND FOUND DEPT.: One of Artie Shaw's friends finally succeeded in getting in touch with the missing band leader . . . "The newspapers are reporting your presence in so many different places, all at the same time," Shaw was told. "Do you plan to come back?" . . . "Yes, I'll come back," Shaw informed. "I don't want to go down in history as the Judge Crater of the music business."

EMPLOYMENT DEPT.: District Attorney Geoghan, of Brooklyn, will be tendered a farewell dinner by his assistants on December 21 . . . In the meantime his successor, Judge Bill O'Dwyer, has received hundreds of applications pursuant to his announcement concerning the forms to be filled out, experience desired, etc. . . . Among these applications are many from Geoghan's current staff.

THEATER DEPT.: The Lord Chamberlain in London refused to permit performances wherein an actor portrays Hitler in a serious play . . . Last week, however, the Lord Chamberlain gave his consent for Hitler portrayals in comic routines by Jimmy Nervo at the Palladium's Crazy Show and in two revues by Douglas Furber and George Black.

FASHIONS DEPT.: Lucius Beebe, the drama critic for WOR, went to Boston last week to see the new Paul Muni show, "Key Largo" . . . Harry Bull, the magazine editor, saw Lucius there and asked him why he was reviewing a play in Boston, when it was opening in New York two days later . . . "The opera is opening the same night and I'm going there," Lucius explained . . . "But as a drama critic," Bull suggested, "shouldn't you be at the play?" . . . "Yes," explained Beebe, "but I bought new clothes."

LOCAL NEWS: Elsa Maxwell will leave for Hollywood shortly to make 12 movie shorts and then a feature film for Darryl Zanuck . . . The local bank chieftains are wagering that Curacao will become the capital of the Netherlands before the new year . . . Ambassador Bullitt will leave France for a short Christmas holiday.

FINANCE DEPT.: Charlie MacArthur and Quentin Reynolds were week-end guests in the country . . . A combination of fresh air, strange hours and exercise wearied MacArthur and he fell asleep on a sofa . . . This annoyed Reynolds, who, aided by two butlers, carried MacArthur to his room and put the playwright to bed . . . "Will that be all, sir?" asked the butlers . . . "Thank you very much," Reynolds told them, removing all the money—$17—from MacArthur's pockets and presenting it to the butlers. "Mr. MacArthur is a very generous man, who appreciates courtesies. Whenever this happens he always wants me to reward those who assist him."

Funny Fellow

CHARLES BUTTERWORTH, droll comic of stage and screen, who will headline next week's stage bill at the Earle Theater

Atlas

The "Three Heat Waves" really heated the Atlas stage with their unique style of dancing and singing yesterday. These boys have just completed a three-month engagement at the Trocodero Club in Hollywood and will continue at the Northeast house through Tuesday.

The inimitable "Senator Murphy," billed as the logical candidate for 1940, convulsed yesterday's packed theater with his chatter on political problems and affairs. Last but not least, Clemen Belling & Co. presented one of the cleverest dog acts in show business.

As usual, Leon Brusiloff's swing band, headed by the master of ivories, Sparty Donato, kept the audience in a lively mood with merry music.

The screen double-feature bill presents Gloria Jean in "The Underpup" and Charles Grapewin in "Sabotage."

'The Puritan' Is a Tensely Gripping Film

Much-Discussed Screen Story Is Revealed At the Belasco

After a stormy career, "The Puritan" has arrived at the Belasco Theater, bringing to the Capital of a nation founded upon tolerance a stirring indictment of intolerance from an Irish author and a French studio.

It is a remarkably fine film, even for the realistically skilled French, produced with cold directness and brilliantly played by Gallic actors whose first law is naturalness.

"The Puritan" is a young journalist, apparently one who had strong promise. He has viewed the waste of life around him with horror. It is, he feels, to the advantage of all to live within rules and customs, to conserve our God-given benefits. His enthusiasm, aided by a natural asceticism, has led him, through a vigilante society, into a frenzied fanaticism.

In the apartment building where he lives is a young woman whose loose living shocks him. He has reasoned with her to no effect. He kills her. Shifting the blame on her lover, he attempts to rouse justification for the girl's death, angering his editor, frightening his family and attracting the police through his loud vindication of her violent end. The police commissioner is a knowing detector of human reasoning and with clear directness traces the crime to its source, bringing terror and retribution to the self-appointed guardian of society who has already realized that his crime was one of lustful jealousy and not one of moral purification.

That its point is so unerringly made is the more to the film's credit. Jean-Louis Barrault brings tremendous understanding to the role of the murderer. Pierre Fresnay is similarly excellent as the commissioner. The direction of Jeff Musso is the seat of the work's intensity.

The sensitive pantomime hardly requires the efficient English subtitles for so powerfully provocative an argument. R. L. C.

"BRING ON THE GIRLS." The Independent Burlesque Association presents the musical production in two acts and 20 scenes, featuring Georgia Sothern and Gladys Clark, supported by Murray Leonard, Dick Richards, Boo LaVon, Artie Lloyd, George Tuttle, Christine Nielson and the Carney Twins. Dance numbers devised by Frank Bryant; staged by James J. Lake. Reviewed Sunday matinee by Art John.

Without the presence of their star performer, Bob Carney, who is suffering with a serious eye ailment, the cast of this week's revue have to work harder than usual. This they do with eminently satisfactory results.

Georgia Sothern, a local favorite, is the featured artiste on the bill and offers a new cycle of the dance numbers that have made her so popular here. Miss Sothern is in a class by herself, insofar as executing a fast musical speciality is concerned. She begins where most of the others leave off.

One of burlesque's most versatile and charming girls, Gladys Clark, is also on the bill and is a versatile performer. Possessing a dynamic personality, Miss Clark sings well, plays a clarinet and is somewhat of a commedienne.

Heading the comedy department are Artie Lloyd and Dick Richards. Lloyd, a veteran funster, is cast in several amusing sketches, while young Richards, making his initial appearance here, is no less effective and funny. The latter, with the capable assistance of Murray Leonard, probably one of the best character and straight men on the circuit, presents humor which is new, novel and original.

The distaff portion of the bill also has such charming exhibitionistes as Boo LaVon offering several beauty parades; the Carney Twins, in a nifty dance routine, and Christine Nielson, whose acrobatic dance routines are A-1.

George Tuttle's fine singing enhances many of the posing numbers, and a line of youthful and pretty girls make up a chorus which is seen often to high advantage.

Trans-Lux

Our favorite among the 35 news pictorials at the Trans-Lux Theater this week is the stirring but affective message of Queen Elizabeth to the women of Britain. With a background of scenes of the recent visit to Washington it has a special spectacular interest.

A Nazi bomber in flames, shot down by a 21-year-old New Zealander, the first pictures of the Munich Beer Hall bombing, Hitler at the funeral of the victims, and pictures of the German air force in action, are all remarkable pictures that should make the permanent record.

Then there is a fine series of shots of opera's opening at the Metropolitan, in New York, and, among the sports, a surprising exhibition of bowling by the Champion Joe Falcara, and a number of football games.

"Historic Cities of India" is the title of the travelog, and it is a beautiful coverage of this fascinating country. It is concluded with rare shots of the Taj Mahal. Lovers of the "Our Gang" comedies will thoroughly enjoy "Auto Antics." And never again will you look down upon the lowly sardine after you have seen "Millions of Fish." It unfolds a complete industry afloat in the Pacific, which takes the sardine apart to process a valuable oil, edible fish and a fertilizer, not to mention the leftovers for the seagulls.

"Mother Goose Goes Hollywood" is the cartoon, and it is one of Disney's best.

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Pittsburgh, Pa., Dec. 3 (INS).—The lull in publicity about "Gone With the Wind" is just the calm before the ballyhoo storm breaks to launch the biggest picture of many years. Let me tell you all I've heard about the final plans: A special plane leaves Hollywood December 13, carrying Clark Gable (without Carole), Vivien Leigh and Laurence Olivier. Olivia De Havilland, David and Irene Selznick and Myron Selznick. On a special train leaving the same day will be Ona Munson and Laura Hope Crews. But this is only the beginning!

LOUELLA PARSONS

The Governor of Georgia, E. D. Rivers, has declared a State holiday for the day "G. W. T. W." opens and the mayor of Atlanta has gone him one better by decreeing a three-day holiday for the city. A $25,000 advance sale is checked up for tickets, with fans standing in line already to reserve seats, if possible. Profits from the opening night will go to the Atlanta Community Chest fund. After the premiere, Clark Gable and Vivien Leigh will lead the grand march at a typical Southern ball with half the citizens of Georgia lined up behind them.

Darryl Zanuck is watching the 1939 selections for All-American football heroes with more than idle curiosity. The boys themselves don't know it yet, but 22 of the top selections from all the experts will be offered Twentieth Century-Fox contracts for "Yesterday's Hero." This is the story William Brent, a sound man on the lot, authored and tried to sell for a movie. When they turned him down he wrote it as a fiction story and sold it to one of the biggest national magazines. That's Hollywood for you—but Darryl has a sense of humor and doesn't mind admitting it cost them ten times as much for the printed yarn. In the meantime, Brent has been transferred from the sound department to the scenario department to help script his story about the rise and fall of an All-American.

Howard Hughes has borrowed Freddy Schussler from David Selznick to be his casting director in his new film organization. Freddy was with him on "Hell's Angels" and his first assignment will be to find a girl who can act. Howard is not questing for another Jean Harlow or an "oomph" girl. Right now the chief target of interest is 16-year-old Ann Baxter, the New York stage actress, who flew out here originally to test for "Rebecca," but she may be too young for the role Hughes has in mind about which he is giving out exactly nothing in the line of information.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: June Gale, who went East three weeks ago, married Oscar Levant, well-known pianist, in Fredericksburg, Va., last Friday. She has given up all thoughts of her movie career; the burglar who moved in on "The Westerner" troupe in Tucson, Ariz., and all but cleaned them out—was polite about it. He left Gary Cooper and the others the clothes they wear in the picture; Fifi D'Orsay leaves right after New Year's for Brazil to make a movie the South American way; Anna Neagle is knocking them dead on the RKO lot wearing a glamorous blonde wig in "Irene;" after all those tests, wonder what's happened to Cobina Wright, Jr.'s movie career? She opens December 8 with Vincent Lopez's Orchestra at the Palace Hotel in San Francisco; Peggy Carroll and Lief Henie (Sonja's brother) a duet at the "It" cafe.

Mary Pickford with the newlyweds, Gwynn Pickford and Bud Ernst, taking in the show at the La Conga; spotted in the same place were Mae Murray and Guido Orlando; George Raft can't make up his mind whether he wants to vacation in Honolulu or Havana, but it looks like Havana; Spencer Tracy is crazy to play "Pa" Penny in "The Yearling." M-G-M will start a terrific search for "Jody" soon, for they feel no boy movie actor in Hollywood is right for the part; Hedy Lamarr looking gorgeous on the M-G-M lot in a scarlet sports dress. It's a mistaken idea that they are re-shooting "I Take This Woman" from an entire new script.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

'Chase' Is New Pastime of Many Tourists

"Chasing the movies," the tourists' most popular pastime is becoming one of Hollywood's major problems.

Time was when the motorist with leisure hours to spend contented himself with chasing fire engines. Now, at the first sign of a studio bus filled with extras, he makes a mid-block "U" turn and the pursuit is on.

Popularity of the game has been heightened by the studios' ban against visitors.

Managers of location troupes are in a dither trying to figure out ways of getting to locations without attracting the notice of all the idle motorists along the way.

Only a few days ago Frank Lloyd left the studio for a one-day location job at one of the most inaccessible spots along the shoreline of the outer harbor at San Pedro. The call, for 7:30 a. m., assembled a company of approximately 400 persons. By the time the cavalcade had made its way to San Pedro, it included 600 tourists!

Even distant locations are not immune to the "movie-chasing" problems. William Wellman, producer-director of "The Light That Failed," new Ronald Colman starring vehicle, returned last week from several days' work on the desert near Santa Fe, New Mexico.

"Am I glad to get behind studio walls again!" he exclaimed. And proceeded to tell of tourists, in droves, detouring miles out of their way to visit the location, until the company's own cars couldn't progress along the narrow roads.

Redskins in Rage at Referee After 9-7 Loss to Giants

Packers Win, 12-7, Meet New York for Title

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

New York, Dec. 3.—When, in the years to come, the youngest among today's 62,404 Polo Grounds' fans dodder into old age, they'll still be debating the placekick by blond Bo Russell.

POVICH

Was it good? Did it miss? Referee Bill Halloran said it did miss and his was the supreme authority on that field. There could be violent protests, but no appeal. But good or no, the referee was presenting football with a debate that is a certainty to endure.

It happened before a professional football record crowd on a last-minute kick that was laden with both victory and defeat for the Redskins and Giants. And as an incident it will take a place as football's equivalent of the famed Dempsey-Tunney "long count" which left the Nation's prize-fight fans into two camps and, ten years later, still finds them far apart on the subject.

At least this much can be established about the kick: Referee Halloran, standing behind Russell in line with the ball, was in the best position to watch its flight. But there was indecision in his act of signaling that it had missed. There was no doubt that it was excruciatingly close.

It was close enough to cause a good number of the Giant players on the field to look up at the ball and then fling their helmets to the ground in despair at what appeared to be a Redskin field goal. And to cause the Redskins to hop about in jubilation at what appeared to be Russell's game-winning kick.

But when Halloran said no, it was the high court of football talking.

Wide Choice of Stories on Kick

In the Redskins dressing room after the game, the persons who wanted to believe that Russell's kick was good had his choice of stories. Redskins declared that Giant fans sitting behind the goal posts had shouted to the Washington players that they had been robbed. Charlie Malone asserted that New York police standing directly behind the posts vowed to him that the kick had passed inside the uprights. According to others, Umpire Tom Thorpe admitted that he had differed with Halloran on the play, (which we doubt) and there was other evidence offered to the effect that the Redskins had been bilked.

But the story we liked best was the story told by Johnny Spirida, substitute end who was in the line-up at the time of the kick and who for a good part of a minute afterward had believed the Redskins had won the game.

"Two plays before the kick, I was down on the scrimmage line and big Ed Widseth, the Giants' left tackle, had just told me he was going to punch me on the nose on the next play," said Spirida. "I told him to start punching.

"That was my job, to take Widseth out of the play and I had hit him hard a couple of times. On one play I did hook him with my elbow and it was holding, but I got away with it. Widseth was hopping mad and that's why he was set to punch me.

"Then Russell made his kick. I didn't see it, because I was still working on Widseth. I was wondering what was happening to the ball when Widseth shoved me away. Then he shook my hand and said 'It's good. You guys win. And you deserve it. No hard feelings, Pal. Widseth wasn't kidding either."

Giants Produce Surprise Performer

But that kick wasn't the entire ball game, even though it meant the difference between victory and defeat for the Redskins. There were 59 minutes of action that transpired before and for three quarters of the game the Giants outperformed the Redskins.

They were the same old Giants, a gang of opportunists who pressed every advantage and didn't give a darn for the odds against them. They were alert and intercepted four Redskin passes. And Wily Steve Owen had a special surprise package for the Redskins today.

He had Kink Richards. Figuratively, the Giants exhumed Richards, breathed new life into him and sent him out to wreck the Redskins. Long ago the veteran Richards had forfeited his place as a backfield regular for the Giants. Four years ago he had slowed up that much. But for today's game, Owen had apparently been saving him.

Aside from Tuffy Leemans, Owen had little else in the Giants backfield who could compare with the Redskins' ball-carriers. So he withheld Richards from most of the season's games to freshen him up for this one effort. And the old war horse who can still generate a tremendous pick-up when he hits the line was rarin' today. It was his into-the-line charges, all 213 pounds of him, that set up the first pair of Giant field goals.

Redskin Team Was Riddled

Only a brutal critic could deal harshly with the Redskins on the basis of the beating they took today. Actually it wasn't the Redskin team that Ray Flaherty was putting on the field all season. The Giants were the club which had set up a pregame shout of injuries, but it was the Redskins who were actually shot.

skins team that Ray Flaherty was putting on the field all season. The because he had no reason for complaint but because he did not wish to tip off the Giants as to the identity of his injured members. But the fact was that Farkas and Baugh and Malone and Edwards were hospital cases, hoping against reason that they could stay in the ball game. And they come pretty close to being the nub of the Redskin team. The minutes played by the quartet today, if piled on end, wouldn't amount to a half hour.

There, we've gone and done it—alibiing for the Redskins. It just goes to show this department is an old softie.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, Dec. 3.—The big, friendly, slightly-vegetated head of Tiny Thornhill is among the more distinguished noggins scheduled to roll in the sawdust at the end of this football season. At least it was up until last Saturday when his Indians beat Dartmouth for their first victory of the year.

CONSIDINE

That, possibly, might call off the wolves. But the probabilities are that it won't. The anti-Thornhills are mainly on the Pacific Coast and they sat by forbiddingly when Tiny's battered team went down to a long series of losses. It could score only three touchdowns until the California game, which drew 30,000 less than it normally does. The Dartmouth victory was scored 3,000 miles from the home market.

We ran into Thornhill yesterday and today, after admitting that it was none of our business, asked him how it feels to be a hunted thing. He rubbed a paw across his slightly dewy forehead, started to say a couple of things that might not look good in a family newspaper, and then began a cold, dispassionate description of the occupational disease which each December afflicts many good coaches who, for reasons completely beyond their control, have bad seasons.

"In the first place, there hasn't been any official word from the school officials about my going," the deep-voiced man who only a few years ago was hailed as a wonder-coach said. "But, of course, I hear a lot of things. A lot of them hurt, too, not so much because they're so darn unfair and unreasonable, but because they amount to little more than personal attacks on me.

The Real Reason Is Injuries

"Now I'm not alibiing. I want to tell you my side of things. Sure, we've had a terrible season. Couldn't have been worse. But does that make me a bum, really? The reason we've had a bad season is that every important player we've got has been hurt—badly hurt—all season. And I've had to use sophomores."

We asked him what was the matter with sophs.

"Nothing, except by and large they can't play football. You can't expect 18 or 19-year-old kids to play with men, and I mean men. There isn't a top-flight college coach in the country who'll use sophomores—unless he either has to use them or he's got a big lead. Most coaches keep them on the scrub teams, to practice against, and by keeping them out of the line-up they can keep them in school a year or two longer—and start them out, as so-called sophomores, after about their third year in school. I had to use legitimate ones this year."

We asked the man who was a Rose Bowl coach (when he had Grayson, Moscrip, Topping et al.) how many old grads it really took to oust a coach. He looked pained as he said, "damned few, oddly enough. I've made a pretty good study of the fellows who want to get rid of me, after 17 years at Stanford. There are about 25 or 30 of them—and they're all loud-mouthed. That's the way those 'anti' guys always are. They can yell louder. They're always better organized than the 'pro' fellows, too."

Bound to Be a Better Coach Today

"Listen," he said, earnestly, "I'm a better coach today than I was when I had the Rose Bowl teams. I'm bound to be. I've seen more football, I've learned things and I haven't loafed. Hell, I took a kid named Stan Lee, who could kick a lick and spent a whole summer with him—on my own, see, to teach him how.

"That loud bunch that wants to get rid of me . . . I wonder if they know what these kids mean to us. I mean to my wife and myself. I mean calling us by our first names, and kind of being a part of the family. Isn't that important, too? I wonder if they know how I got some of them, and the way we give them a chance to get an education."

We asked how.

"Well, a couple ways. I've gone to a few sympathetic fellows and got them to pay this or that boy's tuition, when the kid couldn't pay it himself. And I formed something we call the 'Buck of the Month' Club. Anybody can join, for $12 a year. The dough goes to the registrar of the school and pays the way of some kid. And in return, we see that the 'Buck of the Month' members get seats between the 30-yard lines for the game with California."

We asked [illegible] in thunder he didn't fight back.

Thornhill [illegible]ed. "That kind of battling would only hurt the school—and the school's bigger than my loud-mouths, or me."

Agree Unanimously Place Kick Was Good; 'Giants Admit It'

By a Staff Correspondent

En Route to Washington With the Redskins, Dec. 3.—In a fury at their defeat by the Giants, the Redskins tonight boarded a Washington-bound train with their rage directed toward Referee Bill Halloran.

Redskin players were unanimous in their belief that they were given a bum decision by Halloran on Bo Russell's last-minute placekick, with that decision by the referee vanished their chances to meet the Green Bay Packers in the league play-off which might have netted each Washington player as much as $1,000.

From Capt. Turk Edwards to the veriest substitute they had their own versions of the play, ranging from stories which declared that the Giants had admitted the kick was good to willingness to take oaths that it went inside the posts.

Flaherty Now Calm

Calmest of the returning Redskins was Head Coach Ray Flaherty, a philosophic figure compared to his actions at the time of the kick when he sprinted onto the field in violent protest of Halloran's decision and then at the game's end upbraided the referee all the way to the dressing room.

"Halloran told me he could have called it either way," said Flaherty. "He said it was like a close decision by an umpire on a ball or strike. I could argue but it would do me no good."

Flaherty declared that his actions on the field was an attempt to stand by his players. "From the bench the kick looked good to me and when my fellows who were in the Approval of Farm 'Agreements' Given

Midwinter Meeting in Cincinnati Finds Numerous Trades Brewing, But Only Talk Resulting So Far

By the Associated Press

Cincinnati, Dec. 3.—Baseball clubs were given a green light on working agreements with members of their farm systems today in an announcement by William G. Bramham, president of the National Association, that such agreements could now be "approved and promulgated."

In making the announcement, Bramham quoted from a letter he received from Commissioner Kenesaw M. Landis that his reason for holding up consideration of all working agreements since early September "was the misuse of dummy clubs, both openly and secretly, for the setting up of working situations."

The letter from Landis added that other misuses had been covered in numerous decisions and attention was called to his action of last week in fining the St. Louis Cardinals, Detroit and Brooklyn clubs and affiliates for alleged practices and infractions of the rules.

Bramham's announcement stated: "Working agreements between clubs in professional baseball granting rights of selection of players' contracts for valuable consideration, not entered into or used in violation of the rules or invasion of the rights of other leagues, clubs or players, are not objectionable and will be approved and promulgated."

Officials Befuddled

This left the horde of baseball men here for the midwinter meetings of the major and minor leagues a little confused as to what the whole thing meant and several openly asserted the action would not affect their efforts to amend the present rules to provide greater freedom in farm relations.

Otherwise there was lots of talk and tobacco smoke in baseball's temporary capital, but little action.

Dr. (Sleepy) Glenn Resigns Coaching Berth at W. Va.

Morgantown, W. Va., Dec. 3 (AP).—Dr. Marshall (Sleepy) Glenn resigned tonight as head football coach of West Virginia University.

In a letter to Dr. Charles E. Lawall, president of the university, Dr. Glenn said he wished to give his full time to the study of medicine and intended to begin his practice at Charles Town, W. Va., next April.

The university indicated it was not ready to announce his successor. Dr. John Bain (Jock) Sutherland, former Pitt coach, and Bill Kern, Carnegie Tech mentor, are among a number of coaches who have been mentioned as Glenn's successor.

The Mountaineers finished one of their most disastrous seasons under Glenn Saturday, bowing 13-0 to George Washington. The season showed four wins, five losses and one tie.

Ken Overlin, Orgovan Meet Here Tonight

Overlin's Last Bout Before Important Go With Brown

Ken Overlin, who will be boosted to the No. 2 ranking position soon by the National Boxing Association, goes to the post as a middleweight for the next to last time in this city tonight when he battles Babe Orgovan, tough Texan, in the eight-round main event of an all-star card at Turner's Arena.

The former all-Navy champion, following his engagement with Orgovan tonight, will meet Ben Brown, Atlanta's crack middleweight, over a ten-round distance in that city next week in a fight which will ring down the curtain on the classy boxer's long campaign for honors in the middleweight division.

His engagement with Brown will be the second in three weeks. Just one week ago Overlin defeated the Southern favorite down in Miami over a ten-round distance and it was this victory which forced Overlin to quit the middleweight ranks for the light heavies.

To Fight Brown Again

By defeating Brown, Overlin threw a monkey wrench into a well-set-up plan which was to bring Brown and Conn together down in Miami in February for the light heavyweight title. Chris Dundee, Overlin's manager flew immediately to New York to get into a huddle with Mike Jacobs to convince him that Overlin is now the fighter for Conn and not Brown. The outcome of the meeting was a return engagement against Brown which will be held in Atlanta next Monday night, the winner of this match to go against Conn for the title.

But Overlin, first of all, is not forgetting his tough meeting with

Green Bay to Play N. Y. Next Sunday For Professional Championship; Detroit Outclassed on Rain-Soaked Gridiron

(Shirley Povich's story of the Redskin-Giant game will be found on Page 1 of the First Section.)

By the Associated Press

Detroit, Dec. 3.—The Green Bay Packers retained the Western Division championship of the National Professional Football League today by coming from behind in the last period to conquer the Detroit Lions, 12 to 7.

The struggle, witnessed by a crowd of 30,699, was played in a chilling drizzle on a gridiron as slick as axle grease. Players of both teams were almost unrecognizable because of the mud a few seconds after the opening kick-off.

Meet Giants for Title

One of football's toughest teams when the blue chips are down, the Packers will play the World Champion New York Giants at Milwaukee next Sunday for the league championship. The Giants beat Green Bay in the title game a year ago.

Today's victory left the Packers with a season record of nine wins and two defeats and wrecked the hopes of the Chicago Bears for a tie and playoff for Western Division honors. The Bears won eight and lost three, finishing their schedule a week ago.

Today the Packers counted in every possible way, scoring a field goal in the second period, a safety in the third and finally a touchdown and a conversion that won the game in the early minutes of the fourth quarter.

Hinkle Goes Over

Clark Hinkle, the ageless fullback, smashed over from the 1-yard line for what eventually proved the winning marker.

Obviously keyed to a high pitch for the showdown game, the Packers threatened Detroit's goal in the opening minute when a 47-yard aerial from Arnie Herbzer to Carl Mulleneaux carried the ball to the Lion 8. The Lions made a great stand and took the ball on downs on their 13.

Late in the quarter, Fred Vanzo, Detroit quarterback, recovered a fumble on the Packer 24. Stalled on the 15, the Lions tried a field goal but the boot by Phil Martinovich just missed.

The Packers succeeded where Detroit had failed early in the second period, turning a Lion fumble into three points as Paul Engebretsen booted a 16-yard placement.

Fumble Aids Lions

A fumble by Hinkle recovered by John Wiethe of the Lions on the Packer 29, set up Detroit's only points seconds later. A pass from Dwight Sloan to Jim McDonald carried the ball to the 15 and Sloan followed up with a sprint around Green Bay's left end for a score. Charley Hanneman converted.

On the final play of the first half Martinovick barely missed another field goal try, this one from Green Bay's 24. Throughout the last half the Lions were in the hole constantly and were kept busy at-

Tillie Manton's Two Field Goals Win for Bulldogs

By International News Service

Portland, Ore., Dec. 3.—Tillie Manton, Washington Redskins' field goal booter in 1938, today kicked one from the 16-yard line in the fourth period to give the Los Angeles Bulldogs a 19-17 victory over the Columbus Bullies in a thrill-packed American League professional football game.

The victory boosted the Pacific Coast team into the league lead.

"Jumping Joe" Williams, fullback, scored first for Columbus from the 3-yard line after Ed Busich, end, snared a pass from Alphonse that was good for a 61-yard gain. Hutchinson, Los Angeles halfback, ran back the second kickoff 96 yards for a touchdown to tie the score.

The game was interspersed with five field goals, two by Manton.

FIRST QUARTER

Redskins — Wilkin of the Redskins kicked off and Richard took the ball on the Giants 5, returning it 15 yards before Malone and Filchock brought him down.

Giants—Richards charged through the center of the line for 8 yards. Richards cut back through right tackle for six yards and a first down on the Giants' 34. On a reverse Cuff skirted left end, sidestepped his way past the Redskins' secondary and was in the clear when he stepped and was tackled by Farkas on the Redskins' 39 after a 27-yard gain. Danowski overshot Cuff with a pass. Richards slammed through center for 5 yards. On a thrust at right guard Richards was held to a yard gain. On fourth down Cuff dropped back for a field goal attempt and from the 40-yard line place kicked successfully. The score came 3½ minutes after start of play.

Giants, 3; Redskins, 0.

Cuff kicked off and Filchock gathered in the looping boot and returned it 10 yards to the Redskins' 15, where Mellus hauled him down.

Redskins—Farkas gained 3 yards on a cut-back play at right tackle. Filchock, on a fake reverse at right end, was thrown for a 6-yard loss by Danowski. Filchock passed to Farkas for a 12-yard gain. 1 yard short of first down on the Redskins' 34. On fourth down Karcher came out of the line and punted to the Giants' 28.

Giants—Cuff, on a reverse around left end, was hauled down by Barber for no gain. Barber and Carroll smothered Richards for no gain at left tackle. Danowski faked a punt and passed to Cuff for a 12-yard gain and a first down on the Giants' 37. The Giants called time out. Danowski plied over right guard for 3 yards. Richards, on a reverse, was thrown for a 6-yard loss by Carroll and Wilkin. Danowski aimed a long pass at Richards, but Farkas intercepted the ball after it caromed off Filchock's hands, returning the ball 22 yards to the Giants' 28, where Hein hauled him down.

Redskins—Farkas was hurt on the play but refused to leave the field. Farkas was nailed for a yard loss at left tackle by Howell. Filchock, rushed by Mellus on a passing attempt, elected to run the ball and reached the line of scrimmage. Filchock's long pass aimed at Millner was knocked down by Soar on the Giants' 5-yard line. Russell replaced Wilkin in the Redskins' line-up. On fourth down, with Fitcock holding the ball on the Giants' 35, Russell attempted a placekick that was low and wide, sailing into the end zone for a touchback.

Giants—Soar was stopped by Carroll at left tackle after a 2-yard gain. The left side of the Redskin line held Soar to 3 yards. Danowski, rushed by the Redskins, missed with a pass to Soar. Danowski got off a high punt to Filchock, who returned the ball only 2 yards to the Redskins' 41.

Redskins—Filchock missed with a pass over Farkas' head. Todd replaced the limping Farkas, who left the field to the cheers of the Washington delegation. On a spread play, Filchock passed to Millner, who dropped the ball in the open field. Filchock got away a long pass to Millner, who caught the ball as he stepped out of bounds on the Giants' 25, and the play was called back. Todd punted to Soar, who made a 15-yard return to the Giants' 32.

Giants—Carroll stopped Cuff for no gain at left tackle. The rain began to fall in a steady drizzle. Soar gained 3 yards through center before Russell made the tackle. On a quick-opening play, Cuff banged through center for 3 yards.

SECOND QUARTER

Giants—Ten new men entered the New York line-up, with the Redskins making six substitutions. Baugh, Todd, Johnston and Pinckert formed the new Redskin backfield. On the fourth down Barnum punted to Johnston, who was smothered by the Giants on the Redskins' 19.

Redskins—Todd took the ball from Baugh behind the line and slipped through tackle for 4 yards. Baugh floated a pass to Masterson, who dropped the ball. Todd, on a reverse, skirted right end for 4 yards before Leemans knocked him out of bounds. Baugh kicked poorly out of bounds on the Redskins' 49, the boot traveling only 17 yards.

Giants—Leemans, on a spinner, gained 4 yards at center. Leemans was held to a yard gain by Slivinski at right guard. Leemans rifled a short pass to Walls over the middle of the line for a 10-yard gain and a first down on the Redskins' 31. Barnum hit left guard for 2 yards. Leemans' long pass aimed at Walls in the end zone was intercepted by Todd who refused to hold it for a touchback and attempted to run it out, advancing the ball only to the Redskins' 3-yard line.

Redskins—On first down Baugh punted out to Leemans on the Redskins' 45 and Leemans, behind blocking, returned the kick to the Redskins' 33, where he fumbled and recovered.

Giants—Barnum gained only half a yard at center. Barnum missed with a long pass to Leemans, but the Redskins were offside on the play. Leemans, on a power play over right guard, gained 8 yards and a first down on the Redskins' 20. Barnum fumbled the pass from center and recovered for a 6-yard loss. Leemans gained 4 at center, Slivinski making the tackle. Leemans, rushed on a passing attempt, started to run, then passed to Barnum, who made a shoestring catch for a 17-yard gain before Todd knocked him out of bounds on the Redskins' 5. Filchock replaced Baugh in the Redskins' backfield and Bull Karcis replaced Barnum for the Giants. The Giants called a time out. Wilkins and Masterson stopped Karcis for no gain, but the Giants were penalized 5 yards for backfield-in-motion. Leemans was held to a 2-yard gain by Wilkins. Leemans, on a cut-back play, was thrown for a yard loss by Pinckert. Leemans on a passing attempt, was smothered by Barber and Slivinski for a 4-yard loss. Ken Strong went into the Giants' line-up. On fourth down, with Leemans holding the

Christmas Entry Favored in Inaugural at Charles Town

West Virginia Oval Opens East's Final Meeting Today With Seven-Race Program

By Walter Haight

Racing fans will be Charles Town bound today. The popular six-furlong track, just over the Blue Ridge range in the West Virginia Panhandle, opens this afternoon for a 12-day meeting and the last stand of Sir Bangtail in the East this year. At 1:30 p. m., a limit field of eight horses of the "3-year-old and upward" variety are scheduled to break from the four and a half furlong chute to inaugurate the first of the dozen programs arranged by President Al Boyle and his Charles Town Jockey Club.

While we can't go for the prediction that there will be 10,000 persons on hand, as put out by the track's publicity department, we will wager that a goodly crowd will be on hand and that the ticket window boys will not be standing around twisting their handkerchiefs.

The set-up at Charles Town is substantially the same as has provided good sport for the past several years. T. C. Bradley, the Kentuckian, again will be in the stewards' stand. J. Donald Hay, after a successful Bowie meting, moves over to West Virginia to take charge of the mutuel department. John Morrissey, capable at his trade, will again do the starting. Freddie Burton remains in his capacity of racing secretary.

Plenty of Horses

Horses are plentiful, jockeys are a dime a dozen, the plant has been brushed up and all that is needed is a break from the weather department to insure the track another successful meeting. Despite the fact that Charles Town is more than 60 miles from Washington, the capital has supported the oval since its initial opening in 1933.

The chief improvement at the course this year is the installation of an electric odds and results board in the infield, replacing the "river boat," as the old structure was called. The electric device will allow the mutuel department to post spontaneous odds. In addition, a small electric board has been placed in the betting ring. The set-up has been so arranged that it can be shifted over to a totalizator. However, this machine has not been put in. However, the "tote" probably will be used at the session next spring.

Today's program is a good one. While the majority of horses are "old Charles Town standbys," the Inaugural Purse, fifth on the card, is a race worthy of any track. Secretary Fred Burton has distributed the weights in a manner which points to an interesting struggle. The test at 6½ furlongs has drawn a speedy group, including a pair of entries.

Entry Is Favored

The Christmas entry of Tedmelia and Minson appears the probably favorite. The Feltner entry of Tuleyries Lin and Dulie will draw a good backing. Among the individual horses there are Blabah, Phone Dipon, High Hedge, Likely Lad and others which have proven their speed on the major tracks.

The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad will run its usual race special. Washingtonians who drive have their choice of the Maryland route through Frederick or the Virginia route through Leesburg.

The daily double, as has been the custom at Charles Town, will be conducted on the second and third races.

The complete list of officials named to handle the racing are: Stewards, T. C. Bradley and Kenneth N. Gilpin; racing secretary and handicapper, Freddie Burton; assistant racing secretary, Greg Johnson; starter, John Morrissey; parimutuel manager, Donald Hay; general manager, Al J. Boyle; placing judges, Freddie Burton, A. R. Winters, F. Alexander and E. A. Stone; patrol judges, W. J. Daly, T. W. Keller and C. J. Gormley, jr.; clerk of scales, A. R. Winters; entry clerk, Greg Johnson; program handicapper and identifier of horses, Lally Collyer; track veterinarian, Dr. W. E. Trussell; track physician, Dr. G. P. Morrison; track superintendent, Harry Tharpe; State supervisor of mutuels, E. H. Tuckwiller.

All winners as well as any other horses selected by the stewards will undergo saliva tests.

Mackenzie Afraid Game With Sea Gulls May Get Out of Hand

A stricter enforcement of rules that would assure the safety of the players was demanded yesterday by Coach Redvers (Red) Mackenzie of the Washington Eagles. The Eagles will meet the Atlantic City Sea Gulls in an Eastern Amateur Hockey League game at Riverside Stadium tomorrow night at 8:30 o'clock.

Mackenzie, a throwback to the old days of hard-boiled hockey, nevertheless senses in the fierce rivalry involving the Eagles and Sea Gulls an element of danger that can be eliminated only by heads-up officiating.

"We don't want to eliminate any of the competitive spirit of our players," Mackenzie explained, "but neither do we want to risk the lives and limbs of our players in brawling such as that which resulted in our game in Atlantic City recently.

"I would be the last person in the world who would attempt to curb the players. But I do feel that alert officiating and proper warnings and penalties administered at the proper time will keep the game alive and, at the same time, give players of both teams the protection they are entitled to."

Gillis, Jr., Named Army Grid Leader

West Point, Dec. 3 (AP).—William G. Gillis, jr., of Cameron, Tex., pivot man in this year's Army line, was named captain of the 1940 Cadet football team today.

His selection, which was by a unanimous vote, was announced to the Corps of Cadets at a rally here this afternoon when the team returned from Philadelphia, where it lost to Navy in Saturday's service classic.

Gillis is the son of Judge and Mrs. W. G. Gillis and has had two years experience at the center position.

He also is lettered in track. Gillis succeeds Harry Stella, of Kankakee, Ill., giant tackle.

Princeton Letter Given Herring

Princeton, N. J., Dec. 3.—R. Kenneth Fairman, graduate manager of athletics, announced today that Princeton University had awarded varsity football insignia to 25 athletes. Including Donald G. Herring, jr., Tiger tackle whose leg was amputated after an injury received in the brown game.

Major letter winners included:

Creighton Loses

Sacramento, Cal., Dec. 3.—With Slingshot Knolla, Creighton backfield star, out of the game with a week-end injury, Omaha's aerial offense failed and the Dons of San Francisco University won the intersectional game, 26 to 14, today.

Victory Bell Booms 23,050 Times as Navy Celebrates

Annapolis Wild as Middies Return After Victory; Bergner Loaded Down With Trophies

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Dec. 3.—A howling, hysterically happy mob of 20,000 midshipmen and civilians lifted Annapolis off its colonial foundation tonight when the victorious Navy football team came home.

The recurrent epidemic of delirium gridironitis that affects this ancient alma mater of America's Navy in the year Navy whales the tar out of Army turned a staid little town into a psychiatrist's happy hunting ground.

The volunteer fire departments, sirens a-howl, turned out. Dowagers who other times walk widdershins around the slightest semblance of informality tonight cakewalked gleefully down the cobblestones behind the Navy team.

And the town was right behind them. Annapolis was the Navy's own.

Over the town boomed the deep mellow tones of Navy's victory bell, the huge Japanese gong brought back by Commodore Perry. Rung only when the midshipmen lick the cadets, it rang the welkin, endlessly and in cadence.

Ten was the number, repeated endlessly. No less than 23,050 times the great bronz boomed. Every one of the midshipmen enrolled, from Capt. Al Bergner, of the victorious varsity, to the lowliest plebe, had his crack at the deep-throated relic. Ten was the number, for Navy made ten points to Army's zero yesterday.

Bergner, the big boy from Kankakee, Ill., came back loaded down with the trophies from his bets with Capt. Harry Stella, of Army's defeated soldiers. He clutched the golden helmet Stella wore in the Army-Navy classic, even while he bonged the victory bell.

The rest of the varsity also had loot from bets with their defeated rivals. Blankets, class pins, bathrobes and other "legal tender" of service school betting were brought back by the winners.

Big Al Feldmeier, 200-pound guard, tougher than tanned tripe in a game, was dissolved in tears as he whacked the old bell. He was not alone, for the "gold braid" officers of the academy were laughing in the little gasps of near hysteria, or were near to tears in the couldron of emotion.

Much in evidence was a mule, acquired by the midshipmen somewhere in Philadelphia. Stories differed whether it was the official Army mascot, but at least it was a mule, and Mr. Mule was ridden by almost every celebrating midshipman.

M'Liss Doesn't Show

Melissa, the schnauzer mascot loaned to the varsity by the undefeated "B" squad, did not appear. The crowd was too great to risk M'Liss in the melee, so they took her into barracks by a back way. The little, raggedy pup, given credit by the superstitious sailormen for their first victory over Army since '26, has earned her place in future tradition. M'Liss occupied a place equal to the traditional goat tonight.

The crowd did not break up until long after the "jimmy legs"—yard police—had escorted them into the dormitories.

It's only happened 15 times in the 50 years since Navy first met Army in 1890. And tonight was the wildest reception ever accorded a victorious Navy team, winners by the biggest score ever plastered on a cadet eleven since 1907.

'Agreements' Given Okay

Baseball Heads to Approve Farm System

gled through a lengthy meeting, and the big convention of the National Association, involving all 41 minor loops, was to get under way tomorrow.

For the most part representatives of the big league clubs worked in their rooms, going over problems of their affiliated minor teams, almost all of which were crying for players of all kinds. Considerable shuffling of talent was certain to result, although no immediate announcements were made or expected.

In the lobby others of the baseball clans fraternized and discussed prospective deals.

Still Not Satisfied!

Oscar Vitt, manager of the Cleveland Indians, and Fred Haney, pilot of the St. Louis Browns, held a tight little huddle in one corner. Both were known to be trade-minded, but when they separated Haney laughingly commented, "Vitt wants to give me four for one, but I'm holding out for five. Anyway, we've already had one good break; none of our players has asked for relief money."

Casey Stengel, of the Boston Bees, admitted his club probably would make some kind of a deal. "The top clubs are afraid to swap with each other," he said, "so who else can they deal with except us and the Phillies?"

"The only club that hasn't shown any interest in (outfielder) Max West is St. Louis," interposed Secretary John Quinn, "and I guess they're afraid we'd want Medwick."

"I don't expect to get anybody any good," replied Stengel. "You seldom do in this horse-trading. West is a good youngster and would help Cincinnati or any of the leaders. But they'd wanta give me four or five guys who couldn't play regular and what good would that do? Anyway I've got some young fellers coming along that I'm depending on more than trades."

Clark (Old Fox) Griffith, president of the Washington Senators, was most interested in the fact the conventions were being held in Cincinnati because the first professional baseball was played here 70 years ago. "I was just 70 myself the other day," he remarked, "so I guess that makes me an honorary member or something, too."

There have been no late developments in the Senators' efforts to get Hank Greenberg from Detroit, he added, but implied the Tigers once were interested in Cecil Travis and something might be done during the week.

Warren Giles, general manager of the Cincinnati Reds, let it be known that he wanted a leftfielder the worst way and that Catcher Ernie Lombardi might be the bait, although the big fellow was not going to be sacrificed for cigaret money.

Dropkicker Team's Star at Richmond

Richmond, Va., Dec. 3 (AP).—The dropkick might be almost extinct in college football but it flourished on the undefeated Masonic Home Prep team here this season.

James Dishner, 153-pounder, dropkicker 18 points after touchdown and four field goals, a record which his coaches believe will top any in the country.

Jolly Well Beaten

Jay Jolly 135-pound gridmen swamped the visiting Hilton A. C., of Baltimore, 44-0, yesterday on Edgemoor Field.

Rovers Beat Toronto Six Before 13,982

Canadians Lose First Game of Year To Eastern Team

By the Associated Press

New York, Dec. 3.—The Toronto Goodyears dropped their first game against Eastern amateur hockey competition today, 5-1, to the New York Rovers before a crowd of 13,982 at Madison Square Garden.

The tiremen of the Ontario Hockey Association, eager to square accounts with the New Yorkers for last year's 9-1 trouncing, got right to work and scored at 2:26 after the opening whistle. Bobby Laurent made the tally on passes from Jack Inglis and John O'Flaherty.

From then on, however, they found the Rovers' defense impregnable as Goalie Harry Braithwaite did everything but catch the puck with his teeth to prevent heir scoring.

The victory counted for the Rovers in the standings of the Eastern Amateur League and also for the Hamilton B. Wills trophy.

First period scoring: 1—Goodyear, Laurent (Inglis-O'Flaherty), 2:26. 2—Rovers, Patrick (Pechet-Boucher), 12:07. Penalties—Turner, Inglis, Godfrey, Imlach.

Second period scoring: 3—Rovers, Parker (Pentland), 9:25. 4—Rovers, Collings (McKay-Rimstad), 17:36. Penalty—Inglis.

Third period scoring: 5—Rovers, Pechet (Boucher-Brownridge), 6:21. 6—Rovers, Brownridge (Pechet-Godfrey), 7:13. Penalty—Boucher.

Overlin, Orgovan To Fight Tonight

Orgovan tonight. If he happened to lose this battle, all plans for a possible meeting with Conn would be off. And Overlin is not taking the Texas battler too lightly. Orgovan has been coming to the front with rapid strides of late.

Prominent among his recent battles was a bitter ten rounder against the local middleweight favorite Georgie Abrams. Abrams hit the floor twice in this battle only to come off the floor each time and go on to win the slugging battle.

Scored Six Straight

Overlin, meanwhile has been fighting better than at any other time in his long career. In the last five weeks he has scored six victories, all over prominent fighters. His victory over Brown last week topped off previous wins over such popular fighters as Honey Boy Jones, Al Wardlow, Eric Seelig and Al Matthews.

Buddy Holmes, local middleweight and Tommy Mollis, of Baltimore, have been rematched for a six-round return battle which will go on in the semifinal spot. Holmes dropped the decision to Mollis last week.

Buster Miller, former amateur champion, returns to the ring to meet Bozieman Holman, of Baltimore, in the opening four rounder. Buddy Thomas and Al Gilbert, hard working local middleweights, will meet Ralph McGagin and Lou Stahl, respectively, in other four-round battles listed on the card. McGagin and Stahl are both from Baltimore.

Opening bell, 8:30.

I. L. Batting Title Is Won By Dickshot

Ex-Pirate Bats .355 for 153 Games; Murray Howell 2d

New York, Dec. 3 (AP).—Johnny Dickshot, who wasn't quite good enough to make the grade with the Pittsburgh Pirates, is the International League batting champion for 1939.

The Waukegan, Ill., six-footer who appeared in 153 games for the champion Jersey Giants, got 198 hits in 557 tries for an average of .355. That's the principal story of the season's official batting averages, released today.

Murray Howell, of Baltimore, with a .342 mark, was next among regulars who played in a majority of league games.

Carnegie Leader

Ollie Carnegie, the Buffalo veteran, won two of the most coveted titles in the league. He was the homerun king with 29 circuit clouts and he batted in the most runs—112.

Other double winners include: Nicholas (Mickey) Witek, Newark—most hits, 204 and most singles, 153, and Allen (Dusty) Cooke, Rochester—most doubles, 42 and most bases on balls, 91.

Johnny Tyler, of Buffalo, scored the most runs, 124, Arnold Moser, of Montreal, and Herman Schulte of Newark, tied for the greatest number of sacrifice hits, 21; while Lindsay Deal, of Montreal, won the noncoveted title of being hit the most time by pitchers. He was socked 13 times.

Herman (Flea) Clifton, of Toronto, stole 22 bases to lead in that department, while Benny Warren, of Baltimore, was victimized the most often—striking out 80 times.

Cooke Is Third

The ten batting leaders, in addition to Dickshot and Howell, are Cooke, Rochester, .340; Tommy Holmes, Newark, .339; Estel Crabtree, Rochester, .337; Louis Boudreau, Buffalo, .331; Witek, Newark, 329; Robert Elliott, Toronto, .328; Jim Oglesby, Buffalo, .327; Joseph Martin, Buffalo, .321.

Witek also won the league's "iron man" honors, appearing in all the Newark Bears' contests, the only man to play in all his club's games.

Oglesby, the Buffalo fence buster, had the longest successive game batting streak, hitting safely in 19 games between May 6 and May 28. During that time he made 30 hits in 71 trips to the plate, for an average of .423.

Rochester, second-place team, had the highest batting percentage, .293; went to bat most times, 5,259; made the most hits 1,543, and also made the most three-base hits—69.

Bill Bennings

At The Post

Selections at Charles Town.

Dear Al,

It seems that the retirement from the saddle of Sammy Palumbo was a bit hasty. The Brooklyn boy, the "King of the half-milers," is right here on the grounds. Palumbo took a fling at the chicken business this fall and it seems that things did not click as he expected. So it will be "Palumbo, the gem of the ocean" again. He is having a bit of trouble getting down to best weight but he will be in action. Well, the Maryland season has closed but the odor will linger on as long as nothing is done about the case of Jockey Simpson. Bowie ended the season with a bang. Slightly more than $430,000 was bet last Saturday and the oval averaged better than $308,000 in its first meeting under the guidance of Joseph A. Farrell. Only Pimlico averaged better and that track had eight races daily. I hope Charles Town can hold on to some of that good Bowie weather. The favorite players took a beating at Bowie. If memory serves there wasn't a Public choice to get home in the final 15 races. Somehow, Charles Town will not be the same without Jockey Lou Machado, a gentleman rider if there ever was one. Well, they finally found the right spot for the Bill Bennings big horse, Dunlad. If you look at the entries you will find him on the "also eligible" list in the substitute race. What could be lower than that? He shipped to this track from Bowie without a slip. Trainer Bob Cook reports that he is sound as a bell of brass, hasn't a pimple on him and has four legs. He refuses to be quoted on Dunlad's running ability, however. But we shall se what we shall see. Jockey Leon Garrett will resume riding at this meeting. He has been around for several weeks working horses and looks fit. Joe Cowley expects to be a busy saddle artist. He rode in fine form at Bowie and should carry on. Charlie Ulbig will handle the book of Jockey Mannie Berg. See you on the rail. Now for the winners. Bill.

First race—Notoriety may be the right one in the opening event. He could get nothing on the big apple but is reported to have all his speed and, at the difference in weights, may take the measure of Tavern. The latter is due to be a keen factor but that 121 pounds may be a bit too much even at the abbreviated distance. Rosun has shown plenty of speed and may hop out of the maiden ranks.

Second race—Nay Nay is a tough old mare when she is right. Works indicate she has her speed and the spot looks right. Runout has been stepping along nicely in drills and may prove a good thing in this brand of company. Flickamaru is dangerous if he runs back to Wheeling efforts. Auto Mart would be a keen threat but is a doubtful starter.

Third race—James Pal knows the track and has ability to carry weight. Seems nicely placed in this field and I see no reason for mistakes. Square Play could not get close at the big tracks but will be a factor here. Songstop has speed but may not be able to make the turns.

Fourth race—Counora flashed speed at Bowie and may be the right one in a rather open affair. Feather Tread has been working steadily but has been away from competition for something. Timetta always went well with this kind.

Fifth Race—If High Hedge can get into this race he will be assured an outside post position. He has the speed to take the top on these and may open a good advantage and forget to stop. The Christmas Entry of Tedmelia and Minson will be in thick of the battle. The former has performed in excellent fashion over this track. Blablah has speed and is dangerous.

Sixth Race—Twilight Star seems capable of carrying 116 pounds to victory in a field of this sort. I'm going to string along. Schley Goree finished third in $1,500 company at Bowie and is dangerous. Heraldic for the show end.

Seventh race—Grandiflora has an inside post position and her record indicates that she will be the one to beat in this event. Likes the route. Easter Holiday and Blox to take care of the others.

Eighth race—(Substitute). If this race is used, I'll take Howard, Mondoit and Hastings View.

Best Bet—James Pal.

Hall Wins Pro Passing Crown as Rams Whip Eagles, 35-13

Completes 106, Breaking Baughs Mark

Davey O'BrienSecond With 99 Completions; Philadelphia Rallies In Fourth Period

By the United Press

Colorado Springs, Colo., Dec. 3.—Big Parker Hall, 1938 All-American back, from Mississippi, won the professional passing championship of the Nation today by leading the Cleveland Rams to a 35-13 victory over the Philadelphia Eagles in a National Football League game before 9,100 fans in the Will Rogers Stadium.

Hall, a 205-pound halfback with a tireless passing arm, filled the air with footballs in three bruising quarters to complete 16 of 25 passes and end the season with a record of 106 aerials completed in 208 attempts for a total yardage gain of 1,227. The mark far exceeded the former league record of 81 completions set by Sammy Baugh.

Davey O'Brien, Texas Christian's one-time All-America quarterback, led a desperate but unsuccessful fourth-quarter Philadelphia rally and finished the season second in passing. His record was 99 completions out of 201 attempts for 1,323 yards. Today his mark was 13 for 27.

Under the point-scoring system used by the National Football League, Hall won the championship with a better performance record.

It was Cleveland all the way except for O'Brien's gallant but futile stand in the waning minutes of the game—the first National Professional League tilt ever played in Colorado. Led by Hall's sharp-shooting passing attack, Cleveland scored once in each of the first three quarters and smashed over two more touchdowns in the final period.

Philadelphia, held scoreless for three quarters, took to the air in earnest as the final period began. Both scores were on long passes from O'Brien. Little Davey, who scaled 142 pounds at game time, passed 45 yards to Elwood Dow, Eagle back and fellow Texan, for the first score. Frannie Murray converted. Five minutes later, O'Brien heaved a 35-yard aerial to Jay Arnold, former Texas U. ace, one the goal line for another tally. O'Brien's pass for conversion failed to connect.

St. Mary's Wins, 40-7

Los Angeles, Dec. 3 (AP).—St. Mary's Gaels wound up their 1939 grid campaign today, rolling over an outclassed but ever-trying eleven from Loyola University by a score of 40 to 7.

The Gaels started out listlessly but moved into action after the Loyolans scored on a beautiful pass interception by Tony De Lellis, fleet quarterback, who raced 60 yards down the side stripe for the lone Lion touchdown. The placement for the extra point was good.

Director of Chisox 'Farm System' Is Barred by Landis

Chicago, Dec. 3 (AP).—Baseball Commissioner K. M. Landis announced tonight Robert S. Tarleton, director of minor league operations for the Chicago White Sox, had been placed on the ineligible list for an indefinite period.

This means Tarleton is barred from holding any job in organized baseball until reinstated.

Landis said his investigation revealed Tarleton certified a "notorious gambler and bookmaker" as a scout to the National Association of Professional Baseball Leagues when Tarleton was business manager of the Dallas Texas League Club in 1937 and 1938.

"He tried to certify this same man," Landis added, "as scout of the Longview, Tex., club the past season, but I wouldn't allow it." The commissioner did not announce the man's name.

Tarleton took over management of White Sox farm operations a year ago after several years in the Texas League.

U. S. C., Tennessee Put Titles on Line

By Bill Boni,
Associated Press Sports Writer

Barring two vital games next Saturday between Southern California and U. C. L. A., Tennessee and Auburn, and the Southern Methodist-Rice battle which will be important only to the parties concerned, 1939 college football now is material for the historians and the experts who select the year's No. 1 team.

They will choose it, undoubtedly, from one of two groups. Tennessee, which has shut out all nine of its rivals while coming through unbeaten and untied, falls into one that also includes Cornell and Texas A. and M., as well as San Jose (Calif.) State and Colorado Mines, teams that are smaller but equally impressive in their own class.

Southern Cal, undefeated in all its games but tied by Oregon in one, is bracketed with Tulane at the head of the other division. Similar records are boasted by Duquesne and Georgetown while U. C. L. A. gets a niche of its own for a record of six victories and three ties.

Prospective Bowl Opponents

As prospective opponents in the Rose Bowl come New Year's Day, Tennessee and U. S. C. whipped through the season's last big week in commendable style. The Knoxville volunteers hit so hard on defense that offense became an afterthought in blanking Kentucky, 19-0, on Thursday. The Trojans cut loose their usual 1-2-3 punch, rather than the more orthodox one-two, to come from behind for a 9-7 win over Washington Saturday.

It was one of the top thrillers of the Coast season. Put in the hole by Dean McAdams' runs and passes for a first-quarter touchdown and kept there for three periods by the same McAdams' great coffin-corner punts, U. S. C. finally rolled in the last quarter. Number 3 Quarterback Doyle Nave took the Trojans from their 14 to the Washington 28, and U. S. C. got the decisive two points as the Huskies' Ernie Steele intercepted a pass on his goal line and fell back into the end zone for a safety.

In came Number 2 Quarterback Amby Schindler to pilot the Howard Jones machine 44 yards to the Washington 16. One pass failed. Out went Schindler and, with one minute and 45 seconds to go, in came Number 1 Quarterback Grenville Lansdell. One pass to John Stonebraker spanned those 16 yards, and the game was won.

Harder Task

On Thursday, however, the Trojans had learned that their closing task of the regular campaign should be tougher than Tennessee's. For while Auburn was held to a 7-7 tie by Florida in its first game on its new home field, U. C. L. A.'s Kenny Washington and Jack Robinson were staging a last-period uprising that lifted the Uclans from a 6-7 deficit to a 24-7 win over Washington State.

Tennessee must whip Auburn not only for a bowl bid, but also for a third-share in the Southeastern Conference championship. One share already has been clinched by Georgia Tech, which lost Sparkplug Johnny Bosch in beating Georgia, 13-0, to end its conference campaign undefeated and immediately accepted an invitation to Miami's Orange Bowl. The other goes to Tulane, which drove to 338 yards along the ground, set up one touchdown and scored another on its two completed passes, and thus beat out Louisiana State, 33-20, with a true-blue Merriwell finish.

The end of the trail was far less satisfactory for Duquesne. The Duke's all-winning record finally was checked as they had to come from behind to get a 10-10 tie with Detroit on the accurate place-kicking of John Rokisky, who booted the extra point in the last quarter after kicking a field goal in the second.

Finish in Style

Texas A. and M., San Jose and Colorado Mines finished off in fine style. The Aggies, with Walemon Price pitching perfect passes under imperfect conditions, turned back the Texas Sophomores, 20—0; San Jose cracked the Drake line for a 12—0 triumph, its thirteenth of the year, and Lloyd Madden romped to four touchdowns and a season's total of 141 points that was tops for the country as the Miners routed Regis, 38—6.

One new candidate for a post-season invitation asserted itself in New England. There Boston College, climaxing Frank Leahy's first season as head coach, thoroughly throttled the Holy Cross running attack, put on one 52-yard march and blocked a kick to down the Crusaders, 14—0. The Eagles thus wound up with only an early-season loss to Florida to mar their record.

The end of the season, if not the rest of it, was equally pleasing to Major Emery (Swede) Larson. The genial marine who coaches Navy saw his midshipmen whip the Army, 10—0, for their most decisive margin since 1906, as Bob Leonard's place-kicking accounted for four points and Dick Shafer, a little 155-pound stick of dynamite fresh up from the "B" squad, sprinted 21 yards for the six-pointer.

Rams Come Through

Meanwhile Fordham wrote a rousing climax to a season that started off badly with an 18—7 triumph over New York U., which couldn't stop burly Dom Principe; Stanford duplicated its 1938 upset of Dartmouth as Norm Standlee and Frank Albert paced the Californians to their first win of the year, by 14—3.

Baylor clinched at least a second-place Southwest Conference tie by beating Rice, 10-7, on Center Bob Nelson's last-period field goal; Southern Methodist's Preston Johnston was the main cog in the Mustang running attack that whipped Texas Christian, 14-7; Washington U. overcame a St. Louis lead to win the Missouri Valley title with a 21-17 score, and West Virginia, playing probably its last game under Coach Sleepy Glenn, dropped a 13-0 decision to George Washington.

Major games last Thursday saw Colorado, kicked around in the early season, win the Mountain States Big Seven race by routing Denver, 21-17; Brown boot Rutgers out of the unbeaten-but-tied class by a score of 13-0; Herky Mosley score one touchdown, pass for two more, and kick two extra points as Alabama recorded an unexpected 39-0 landslide over Vanderbilt; North Carolina make good on breaks to shut out Virginia, 19-0, and Kay Eakin pilot Arkansas to a 23-0 defeat of Tulsa.

In Friday games two surprises turned up in Miami's 27-7 licking of North Carolina State, and Boston U.'s 12-0 win over Tampa, while the week's minor activities produced victories for Nevada over College of the Pacific, Muhlenberg over Albright, Dayton over Ohio Wesleyan, Arizona over Montana, and Centenary over Louisiana Tech.

Giants Defeat Redskins, 9-7

There he is met by outraged Washington fans.

Still by Halloran's side is Coach Flaherty of the Redskins, still in a blue rage. Police and Teammate Bob McChesney drag Justice away from the scene, a fighting, kicking Justice, still eager to pursue the referee. In little knots on the gridiron the fighting among the fans continues and the grandstands are in an uproar.

D. C. Fans Take Posts

The stadium lights are on by this time to combat the gathering darkness. Washington fans distinguishable by the red feathers in their hats have grabbed the goal posts, willy nilly, and are parading about the field. The Redskins' defeat not withstanding.

Long after the two teams leave the field, the crowd lingers. Only when the stadium lights go out do they disperse. Ray Flaherty is still hot haranguing the officials somewhere underneath the stands. Big, husky Redskins are back in their dressing room painfully nursing their wounds. It is all over, including the shouting. Darkness falls on the most dramatic episode of professional football's history.

How did the Giants win the game?

They beat the Redskins with the kicking toes of Ward Cuff and Ken Strong, the two backfield pals who all season have been lifting the Giants to victory with the power of their place kicks.

Four times the Giants aimed place kicks at the cross bars and three times they hit their mark. From the 40-yard line in the first four minutes of play Ward Cuff sent his first shot hurtling between the posts. Midway in the second quarter, Strong got his turn, and from 17 yards he lifted the Giants lead to 6-0.

Seconds before the third period closed, Cuff took another shot. It was the kick that beat the Redskins. From 15 yards out he booted the ball over the bar to improve the Giants' lead to 9-0.

Giants vs. Packers

Thus did an underdog Giant team lick the Redskins and qualify for the league championship against the Green Bay Packers who were simultaneously beating the Detroit Lions, 12-7 for the Western title. Next week at Milwaukee. Giants and Packers meet for the professional championship.

But before this it should have been told that the Redskins, rated 5-to-3 favorites before the game, took the field as false favorites. It was a severely crippled Redskin team that met the Giants. The Redskins were battling against brutal odds this afternoon.

Farkas Hurt

Andy Farkas was forced out of the game with finality in the first five minutes when his damaged knee folded beneath him. Sammy Baugh saw action for only a few minutes and limped painfully out of the line-up with his tender ankle. Capt. Turk Edwards' appearance in the game in the last quarter was a mere gesture in an attempt to rally the Redskins. He could scarcely get about on a twisted knee. Charlie Malone, big end and important cog in the passing attack, played less than two minutes after the kick-off, stricken again by the muscle injury in his leg that had plagued him all week.

That's why the Redskins were battling against terrific odds. Flaherty's two-team system of substitutions was riddled. On the shoulders of Redskin reserves fell the burden and in that last frenzied quarter they all but got away with the ball game.

Filchock, Todd Star

Stepping into the breach, Frank Filchock, Dick Todd and Bob Masterson charged back at the Giants in the last quarter and produced the touchdown that threw a scare into the New Yorkers and produced pandemonium among the Washington contingent in the stands.

Big Willie Wilkin, replacing the injured Edwards, gave the Redskins the break that restored them to the ball game. Smashing through the Giants' line with only eight minutes of the game remaining, Wilkin pounded down a punt off the toe of Hank Soar on the Giants' 40 and the ball rebounded to the Giants' 19, where Clyde Shugart pounced on it for the Redskins.

Two plays later the Redskins had their touchdown. Filchock, an able understudy to Baugh as a passer, unwound a long pitch to Masterson on the 1-yard line where Dale Burnett was attempting to cover. The Redskins end plucked the ball from Burnett's grasp and wheeled over the goal line. Russell place-kicked the seventh point.

With five and a half minutes of play remaining, Dick Todd led a new charge against the Giants. The slippery Todd, best running back on the field today, set off the advance with a 27-yard run back of Danowski's punt to put the ball on the Giants' 43.

Redskins On March

Filchock and Todd began then to move the ball through the Giants' line. They gained a first down on the 33 and then Filchock whipped a pass to Spirida for a 21-yard gain that carried to the Giants' 7.

In an uproar was the Washington delegation. Filchock gained a yard and a half at center, and then in came Bo Russell for his placement from the 15-yard line.

You know what happened then.

Bereft of Farkas and Baugh, the Redskins for three quarters were sluggish on offense. Backed up in their own territory by the surprising ferocity of the Giants running attack, they were occupied chiefly with averting Giant touchdowns.

Late in the second quarter the Redskins missed a touchdown by a yard and bungled away an inviting chance to wipe out the Giants 6-0 lead. With Dick Todd having replaced the injured Farkas, a Redskin offensive that carried 89 yards to the Giants 1-yard line was set in motion.

Todd first brought Redskin rooters to their feet by grabbing the kickoff after the Giants' second field goal and scampering 34 yards before Cole pulled him down from behind on the Redskins' 44-yard line. Then with Filchock floating short passes to Todd the Redskins moved deep into Giant territory.

Bob Masterson set the stage for a touchdown at that point by plucking a long pass by Filchock out of the air in the corner of the field just before stepping out of bounds on the one after a 24-yard gain.

Filchock Fumbles

It was a glowing chance for the Redskins to score but they foozled it. Filchock, set to bang at the line, fumbled the pass from center and was smothered for a 4-yard loss. The Redskins went into the air on the next play and Tuffy Leemans brought the threat to a complete halt by intercepting a pass by Filchock into the end zone for a touchback.

Back in the opening quarter Andy Farkas intercepted a long pass by Danowski and rushed it back 22 yards to the Giants' 28 before Hein grabbed him, and the scenery was thus rigged for a field goal attempt by Russell when the Redskins offense bogged down. From the 35-yard line, Russell banged his foot into the ball but it was a dismal effort resulting in a low line drive that evolved as a touchback.

The Giants almost got away with blitzkrieg stuff before the game was a minute old. Ward Cuff skirted left end, danced his way through the secondary and was in the clear with an open field ahead when he slipped and fell on the Redskins' 39 after a 37-yard jaunt.

From that point Kink Richards, a veteran whom the Giants had been keeping fresh for this game, moved the ball to the Redskins 30 and then it was that Cuff dropped back to bang his first place kick home.

Strong's Kick Good

Taking the ball on the Redskins' 35 after Sammy Baugh's out of bounds kick netted only 18 yards, the Giants sallied goalward again just before the second quarter ended. Tuffy Leemans drove to a first down on the Redskins' 30 on power plays and then heaved a pass to Barnum for a 17-yard gain, Barnum making a fancy shoestring catch on the Redskins' 5-yard line. Wilkins and Masterson stopped Leemans and Karcis in three thrusts at the line and then along came Ken Strong. Strong trotted into the line-up, kicked his 17-yard field goal, and trotted right out again.

Hank Soar contributed a 35-yard runback of an intercepted pass thrown by German to start the Giants' third drive to a field goal. Then the running attack was turned over to Richards and it didn't stall until the Giants reached the Redskins' 8, whereupon Mr. Cuff took his second successful shot at the crossbar.

Missouri Expected to Get Orange Bowl Bid Shortly

By the Associated Press

Miami, Fla., Dec. 3.—Announcement that Missouri's once-defeated Tigers will clash here on New Year's Day with Georgia Tech's Yellow Jackets in the Orange Bowl football classic is expected shortly.

Everybody who has kept an eye on the bowl committee's activities is willing to wager the bid will go to the Midwestern eleven featuring the flashy backfield ar. Paul Christman. Definite word, barring a slip, is due early the week.

Charles F. (Jack) Baldwin, committee chairman, announced last night that Tech had accepted, subject to faculty approval, an invitation to represent the South. The school's paternal blessing was expected after a meeting tomorrow or Tuesday.

Coach W. A. Alexander said in Atlanta his team had voted unanimously to accept the bid. If Missouri is the choice for an opponent, "that will be fine," he added. A game scheduled for December 30 at Atlanta between the Engineers and California was automatically canceled by the bowl invitation.

"We are going down there because all our boys wanted to go," said Alexander. "We thought they played so fine all season that we wanted them to do what they wanted to do."

Tech wound up a difficult season by walloping Georgia, a traditional enemy, 13-0, yesterday. Orange Bowl officials, having felt the Atlanta team out, rushed in with the definite bid as soon as the score was learned.

Alexander's Rambling Wrecks lost two games by narrow margins during the season, uke handed them a 7-6 defeat and Notre Dame a 17-14 setback. But in the rest of its nine-game schedule Tech showed skill and power by winning over Howard, 35-0; Vanderbilt, 14-6; Auburn, 7-6; Kentucky, 13-6; Alabama, 6-0; Florida, 21-7, and Georgia, 13-0.

This record assured Tech at least a share in the Southeastern Conference championship with Tulane and Tennessee.

Missouri, tutored by Don Faurot, went through the season with but one loss, a 19-0 defeat by Ohio State. The Tigers acquired the Big Six Conference championship by whipping Colorado 30-0; Washington, of St. Louis, Mo., 14-0; Kansas State, 9-7; Iowa State, 21-6; Nebraska 27-13; New York University, 20-7; Oklahoma, 7-6, and Kansas, 20-0.

Postgrad

By Jack Munhall

Tennessee, they say, is practically assured of basking in the rich glow of the Rose Bowl if it gets by Auburn safely. Georgia Tech and probably Missouri will reap the lucrative fruits of the Orange Bowl. The Sugar Bowl, it is reported, will pass into the hungry paws of Tulane and Texas A. and M.

MUNHALL

Meantime our two-year-undefeated Georgetown University football squad, practicing voluntarily and hoping against hope of being recognized after their clinching victory over New York University, has again been overlooked in the distribution of postseason invitations and the attending profits and fame.

True the Hoyas were offered the handsome sum of $5,000 and an optional percentage of the gate to play in the Sun Bowl. And before that a proposition to engage Kentucky, at the time undefeated, in a charity game at Charles Town, West Virginia. The "Coal Bowl," they call this one.

That, however, is the extent of the postseason game offers made the big, capable and colorful squad, coached by Jack Hagerty, one of the finest gentlemen and football teachers to be found. What is the reason?

Why, you are asked, can't a team that has won 15 of its last 16 games—the other being a 13-13 tie with Syracuse—attain its deserved place in the football sun?

On games won and lost this record is one of the finest boasted by any of our colleges, whether large or small. It is truly a commendable and remarkable achievement by a group of comparatively young players working in 100 per cent coordination with an efficient coaching staff.

Still Georgetown is given the cold shoulder by Sugar Bowl and Orange Bowl selection committees. Georgia Tech, a twice beaten eleven, and Missouri, an eleven beaten three touchdowns by Ohio State, are chosen for the Miami assignment which Georgetown had high hopes of landing.

Offhand, you might say that Georgetown has been cheated. Or that politics plays a prominent role in the dishing out of bowl invitations. But actually Georgetown doesn't figure to get any bid before Missouri or Georgia Tech. Examine the records of each team. The Engineers' two losses were to the likes of Notre Dame (17-14) and Duke (7-6). Missouri has no excuse for its 19-0 setback by Ohio State, other than that it was an early-season affair and many teams are so improved by November as to be completely unrecognizable as the same teams which embarked on their football voyages in September. On the favorable side of Missouri's ledger are convincing triumphs, over Colorado (30-0), Washington of St. Louis (14-0), Kansas State (9-7), Iowa State (21-6), Nebraska, note this one (27-13); New York University, 20-7, and finally Oklahoma (7-6).

Records Contrasted

Contrast these records with Georgetown's. Temple (3-2), Roanoke (25-0), Syracuse (13-13), Bucknell (13-7), George Washington (7-0), West Virginia (14-0), Maryland (20-0) and New York University (14-0). There's hardly strong reason for argument. Time was when the above schedule would be a true test for any ambitious eleven. When that ambitious eleven, if it escaped with only a tie to smear a perfect record, would have been justified in howling for national honors.

However, that day is past. Roanoke never was a grid power. Bucknell and Syracuse have been declining in strength. George Washington is only beginning to build up again. West Virginia, in 1938 and again this year compiled two of its worst seasons in history. Maryland simply was outmatched after disposing of Hampden-Sydney and Western Maryland, and dropped seven straight major games. Then New York University remains alone as the one team over which Georgetown could hope to vault into national prominence, into the bowl-eligible list. Unhappily, though, the Violets were beaten badly by Missouri the week before they lost to Georgetown and were overpowered by oft-beaten Fordham two weeks after. Thus was the selling power of this victory reduced.

So it is after taking apart Georgetown's 1939 schedule you can readily understand why Georgetown was undefeated again—and uninvited.

Scant Interest Raised

It also should be reasonably clear that Georgetown has been given its deserved position among the football teams of the country. The most recent Associated Press poll of national sports writers and football experts ranked the Hoyas seventeenth. That represents a big jump over 1938 for the Hilltop.

Bluntly, it could be said that Georgetown's continued streak of victories raised scant interest in the outlying football precincts—in the circles where sentiment is discounted, where a team is judged by the cold dope sheet. By "who did they beat?"

Proof of how lowly rated Georgetown is outside of the District was seen on the trip to meet New York University. Into Gotham traveled a Georgetown team heralded as winning 14 to 15 games in two seasons, to meet the Violets who had lost considerable face by the Missouri rout. But who was favored? The Violets, and overwhelmingly so. Forty-four of 50 New York sports writers, voting in a pre-game poll, picked N. Y. U. They proved wrong, we all know, but the fact remains that they were not impressed with what Georgetown had accomplished previously. And it is in New York that the bowl committees work. It is from New York, too, that the influential propaganda is released.

So, having twice been shown the mistake of its schedule making, Georgetown can be expected to come up with a much improved list of opponents for next year and for years to come. If it doesn't, than all this talk about Georgetown's fiery determination to regain its old-time football glory can be labeled "double talk."

The best way to be undefeated and still uninvited is to knock off teams with no "names."

Right here and now we compliment the quality minded tavern keeper and neighborhood dealer who pays the price for NATIONAL BOHEMIAN—the most expensive ten cent bottle of beer he can buy for you.

Dealers who serve you with NATIONAL BOHEMIAN know it is a great beer—a beer which people who know beer quality will understand and appreciate.

While it doesn't make them as much money as many other beers they sell for a dime, it does makes your dealer a profit—but not a profiteer.

Packers Beat Detroit, 12-7, Win Crown

tempting to fight off Green Bay challenges.

Early in the third quarter the fine punting of Hinkle drove Detroit back to its 6, setting up the safety. Johnny Pingel went back to punt on third down, got a bad pass from center and the boot was blocked by Larry Craig, of the Packers, the ball bounding out of the end zone.

Sparks Aother Drive

Late in the quarter Hinkle sparked a Packer drive from Detroit's 47 that was climaxed when he slashed over on fourth down. The husky fullback gained 15 yards on one thrust and took a 24-yard pass from Cecil Isbell during the march. Engebretsen converted.

A pass interception by Hinkle brought Green Bay nearly into pay territory later but the game ended before the Packers could start a play from the Lions' 2.

The Packers made 15 first downs to Detroit's seven and dominated every department of play.

The reversal left Detroit, after a promising start, with six wins and five defeats, the poorest record made by a Lion team since the city obtained a league franchise in 1934.

Area Survey Reveals Extent Of Bank Loans

$337,000,000 Seen Lent in Six Months In Two States, D. C.

Countering the assertion that banks are not lending, the American Bankers Association today revealed the results of a survey which shows that Washington banks and those of Maryland and Virginia made 156,000 new loans totaling more than $174,932,931 to business firms and individuals throughout the area during the first six months of 1939 and renewed 467,469 outstanding loans aggregating $438,050,060 in the same period. In addition, the banks made 4,927 new mortgage loans totaling $14,560,975.

The study also reveals that business organizations in the area are using less than one-third of the "open lines of credit" kept constantly available to them on the books of the banks.

In making the survey, the A. B. A. sent out questionnaires to the 325 of its commercial member banks in Virginia, 177 banks in Maryland and 21 member banks in the District. Of the District banks, 18, or 85 per cent, replied, while 91 Maryland institutions, or 51 per cent of the State's total, and 114, or 35 per cent of the Virginia banks, submitted their figures.

Estimates Tabulated

Based on the showing of the reporting institutions, and allowing for the concentration of bank lending in the larger cities, the following estimates for the area can be made:

	New Loans.
D. C.	36,000	$37,000,000
Maryland	50,000	60,000,000
Total for area..	336,000	$337,000,000
	Renewals.
D. C.	44,000	$41,000,000
Maryland	180,000	160,000,000
Virginia	900,000	800,000,000
Total for area..	1,124,000	$1,001,000,000
	New Mortgage Loans.
D. C.	900	$4,700,000
Maryland	2,100	7,400,000
Virginia	8,000	16,000,000
Total for area ..	11,000	$28,100,000

In the District, the average number of new loans per bank was 2,007 and the average amount of each new loan was $1,042. The average number of renewals per bank was 2,469 and the average size of each renewal loan was $923. The average number of new mortgage loans per bank was 52 and the average amount of each mortgage was $5,113.

State Averages Cited

In Maryland the average number of new loans per bank was 315 and the average loan was for $1,809. The average number of renewals per bank was 1,071 and the average renewal was for $1,145. The average number of new mortgages per bank was 12 and the average mortgage was for $3,777.

Virginia banks made an average of 812 new loans per bank for an average amount of $924, renewed an average of 2,856 per bank for an average of $877, and made an average of 25 new mortgage loans per bank for an average of $1,930 per mortgage.

Seven District banks, 11 in Maryland and 16 in Virginia reported they maintain "open lines of credit" available to regular business borrowers at all times. Less than a third of the total of this credit in the area was in use on June 30. The figures for each group of banks follow:

	Maintained.	In use.	Pct.
D. C.	$17,189,000	$5,813,147	33
Maryland	53,306,350	14,720,438	27
Virginia	22,167,681	7,452,472	33

Hosiery Output Soars as Dealers Build Up Stocks

New York, Dec. 3 (AP).—The war boom in business affected women's hosiery as well as steel and airplanes.

The National Association of Hosiery Manufacturers reported today October shipments of women's full-fashioned hosiery, following the September war-buying wave, established a record.

Mills reported 4,591,976 dozen pairs, compared with 4,060,923 in October, 1938, the association said. The previous high record was 4,496,981 in November, 1938.

Soaring raw silk prices, it appears, partly accounted for the rush, since dealers were moved to build up stocks on a rising price trend.

Shipments of all kinds of hosiery were reported as 13,156,046 dozen pairs in October against 11,957,372 in the 1938 month and for ten months were up to 114,031,453 from 105,645,790 in the 1938 period.

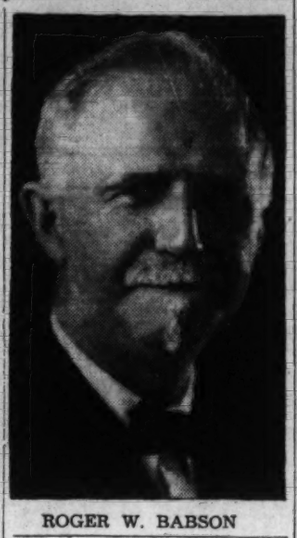
Business Hits 10-Year High, But Stocks Lag Far Behind

Babson, Who Predicted Impending Crash In 1929, Now Foresees Boom Ahead; Wall Street Viewed Over-Cautious

By Roger W. Babson

New York, Dec. 3.—Business closed November by sweeping up to the highest level for any month in ten years! Without adjustment for our increase in population, activity is now only 6 per cent below the all-time highs of 1929 and is 93 per cent above the depression low of March, 1933. Business sentiment, however, continues uncertain and confused. In 1929, the business world thought we could never have another depression. In 1939, the same group thinks we can never have another boom.

It is an even decade since the Golden Era collapsed. In the years after 1929, business took the sharpest and longest drop in history. As measured by the Babsonchart, it power-dived from 123 to 59 in the short space of three and a half years. Stocks cracked from an average price of $381 a share to $41 a share. In 1933 the trend changed. Since then we have been in a zig-zag upswing. We had a sharp rise and then a sharp dip; another brisk rise and another discouraging setback. There were the boomlets of 1933, 1935 to 1937, and 1938. Each of these was followed by "crashlets."



ROGER W. BABSON

Stocks Far Behind

We are now in our fourth boomlet. Business has whirled up to within hailing distance of the 1929 peaks, not taking into account—as I say—the gain in population. Stock prices—which measure business sentiment pretty accurately—are lagging far behind. The average stock is today selling at $150 a share against the same price a year ago and $195 as the 1937 high. Business, however, is 16 per cent above last November and even a notch higher than the 1937 peak. During the past six months the cheeriest communique in ten years have come from our industrial front. Yet, no one seems to be very happy about it.

Of course, we still have one tremendous problem on our hands—unemployment. There are perhaps as many out of work now as at the bottom of the depression. How can this be? Because we have been madly substituting machines for men during the past half decade to hold down costs. We have been driven to this because of labor union activities, rising taxes and an unfriendly Administration. Our jobless problem is a big one. Probably 5,000,000 of our idle workers are unemployable. The remainder, however, should be able to find jobs as business continues to increase.

Spent 30 Billions

For years economists and politicians promised us that if we could start business spiraling upward it would continue to rise under its own momentum. The forecast was that if we put people back to work in the heavy industries they would buy more goods, stores would place new orders with manufacturers, factories would hire more workers. These new employes, in turn, would buy more goods; and around the circle again. The public was so convinced that this upward spiral would bring back prosperity that it has allowed the Administration to spend $30,000,000,000 priming the pump, inflating the balloon, starting the spiral.

Today the upward spiral is underway. The heavy industries are finally going full-blast. The majority, however, fear that the current upswing is just a war baby. True, the German invasion of Poland ignited the spark. So far, however, the war has neither helped nor hurt American business on balance. The 1940 elections, labor troubles, rising taxes and similar hobgoblins are blinding business men to the best industrial news in a decade. Ten years of depression have taken their toll. With business rising, heavy industries booming, earnings good, stocks and commodities cheap, business men are forgetting fundamentals as completely as they ignored them in 1929.

Action and Reaction

The law of action and reaction is working 100 per cent. Ten years ago I was laughed off the platform for predicting an impending crash. "This is a new era. Depressions are a thing of the past. Babson is getting old." This was the word that was passed around. Stocks and commodities were sky-high in those days. Bonds were going begging. There were two chickens in every pot. There were plenty of signs pointing to what lay ahead, but these were ingeniously brushed aside.

Today the situation is just the reverse. Stocks are low in comparison with earnings. Many commodities sell for less than it costs to produce them. Bonds are sky-high. There are two pots for every chicken. After ten years of hard times those same people who could foresee no more depressions in 1929 can today see no more booms. Five years ago these people wept over the lag of the heavy industries. Now the steel mills, car foundries, machine shops are booming. Still these gloom-mongers are worriedly telling their friends, "Business is good, but it won't last. The good old days are gone forever."

"Lost Horizon"

We have had depression and doldrums so long in America that we have come to think of hard times as normal times. America is just as afraid of prosperity today as she was of depression ten years ago. My guess is that those who believe that we can never have another boom will turn out to be just as wrong by 1945 as those who in 1929 believed that we could never have another depression! Interesting as this speculation is, the practical person must concern himself primarily with the outlook for the next six years!

Soviet Policy Is Consistent, Professor Says

Always Opportunistic, Strakhovsky Tells International Club

Although Russia has been a puzzle to the world, she has pursued a consistent policy since the revolution of 1917—a policy of political opportunism, Dr. Leonid Strakhovsky, professor of history at the University of Maryland, told the Washington International Club last night.

The Soviet Union, he said, clothed itself in "respectability" for a while, but it consistently forwarded the "establishment of a world proletarian dictatorship centered at Moscow."

Present Baltic policy, including the invasion of Finland, has a dual purpose, he believes. Explaining that the Russian "life line" stretches from the Baltic to the Black Sea, he said control of the Baltic was necessary to secure that life line. The second purpose, he pointed out, "is the extension of the Communist doctrine."

"Finland," he said, "will go the way of Poland, because of the needless use of armed force when compromise would have been possible."

Contrary to popular belief, he said, "there is no Soviet protectorate over Latvia, Lithuania and Estonia. They are still independent countries despite their treaties with the Soviet Union." He believes that it would have been possible for Russia to handle its relations with Finland in the same manner.

Balance Sheet Drawn Up for New Hampshire

Concord, N. H., Dec. 3 (INS).—New Hampshire today was presented with a complete double entry bookkeeping picture of its public affairs. New Hampshire, it is believed, is the first State to have attempted to show the operations of a Commonwealth by means of the balance sheet and income account method used by large corporations.

This effort was contained in a report by Samuel Crowther, writer and political commentator, to a State commission.

Crowther pointed out that while the people of New Hampshire were thrifty during 1936—the year subjected to study—and saved $13,761,000, their savings were outweighed by the net loss of $17,750,000 in the State's institutions of business, banking and government.

He said that "the people, as a whole, did not earn their living."

DiplomatsHear Music to Aid PolishRefugees

Mme. Orlicz Dreszer Sings; Potocki, Close And Hurban Speak

Diplomats of many countries gathered last night at the Sulgrave Club to attend a musicale for the benefit of Polish war refugee children under the auspices of the General Gustav Orlicz Dreszer Foundation. Mme. Elivna Orlicz Dreszer, noted lyric soprano, and widow of the Polish air minister, was the principal artist of the evening.

Mrs. Tomas Cajigas, wife of Dr. Tomas Cajigas, received in the salon and called for a few words from Count Jerzy Potocki, Ambassador of Poland; Ralph W. Close, Minister of the Union of South Africa; Hjalmar J. Procope, Minister of Finland, and Vladimar Hurban, Minister of Czecho-Slovakia.

Hurban said that "as the representative of a country which has been the victim of wanton lawlessness, I beg you Americans to give your sympathies to us, not because of the suffering we and the Poles are enduring, but on account of the injustices which are being perpetrated upon us, which affect the entire world."

"My speech will be very short . . ." said Count Potocki. "I wish to thank you all for coming here to support this cause and to give funds for the victims in Poland." He thanked Mme. Dreszer "for the contribution of her voice."

The Finnish envoy bowed, but declined to speak.

Retired Banker Dies Here Going To Football Game

A. Cramer Koster, 53, retired vice president of the Citizens Southern Bank, of Charleston, S. C., was found dead in his room at the Capitol Park Hotel yesterday. Dr. A. Magruder MacDonald, District coroner, said death was from a heart attack.

His body was turned over to Lieut. Col. Karl I. Duse, United States Marine Corps, of Quantico, Va., his brother-in-law. A sister, Miss Ethel Koster, of Charleston, survives.

Koster was in Washington en route to the Army-Navy game at Philadelphia Saturday. He was last seen Friday in the hotel lobby arranging transportation to Philadelphia. Saturday a maid attempted to enter his room but was unable to unlock the door. When the same difficulty arose yesterday the door was broken down. Koster was found dead, two tickets to the game in his clothing.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

Speaking of hilarity at bridge tournaments, Uncle Bing, from Buffalo, who, incidentally, is bringing a platoon of bridge players from his city to partake in the Pittsburgh events, had much cause for rejoicing on today's hand. He describes it as the "biggest steal of the season," and played it at a recent up-State championship. He says:

"Al Sobel (tournament director) was dizzy figuring out how our team was plus 450 points, North and South, and plus 530 points, East and West (with three kings and two queens).

"Our partners made five hearts, North-South. Six can be made double-dummy by pushing spades through.

"In the play, South opened with the queen of hearts. It held the trick. South continued hearts. East ruffed and returned the jack of diamonds to the ace in South's hand.

"South returned the two of clubs to the eight in the closed hand. At this point, if South returns the five of diamonds, North ruffs, leads a spade and East is murdered in cold blood.

"East returned the club jack to South's ace and South inexplicably returned another club.

"East then drew trumps and cashed diamonds for rest of tricks, making two clubs, doubled, with two extra tricks, against opponents who could make a slam in almost anything. Ouch!"

Use for Leftover

Save all the liquid leftover from bottled sweet pickles; it's grand for seasoning stuffed eggs, salads, sandwiches, meat and fish loaves. It also is good for basting chops, roasts, meat rolls and steaks.

Listen! with Slocum

WJSV has been spending some time and energy of late co-operating with the Community Chest officials. Last week, in an effort to drive home the necessity of support, a series of broadcasts were made from orphanages, old folks' homes, children's shelters, etc.

In one broadcast, from an orphanage, the little tots had a band. Before any number can be played on a radio station, whether by an orphan asylum band or the New York Philharmonic, it must be "cleared." This is a process of searching to find out whether or not a song can be played in public without special permission.

In completing arrangements, Miss Frances Hall, of the WJSV staff, called the orphanage and asked for the names of the musical pieces the children were to play, explaining that "WJSV wanted to clear the music."

Miss Hall evidently didn't sound her "r" very clearly, because the slightly annoyed holy sister replied: "You may be sure that none of the words our 4-year-olds sing are obscene."

One of the reasons for the success of Bowie, Laurel, Churchill Downs, and other race tracks is there is no accounting for taste, and that's the very same reason the "Model Minstrels," heard every Monday night at 8:30 on WJSV is such a great success.

The minstrels consist of Comedians Tom Howard and George Shelton, and a supporting musical group. It has long been a deep-rooted theory of ye author that a joke is good only once. That theory has many supporters, but Howard and Shelton are not among them. When Tom and George get hold of a gag, it has steady work for weeks to come. In fact, some of their gags have been in continuous motion since the days of Joe Miller.

Comedians come and go, paying thousands of dollars for fresh material, yet Howard and his stooge dress up the old ones, tell 'em well, and continue to be among the most popular teams in the country. So popular, in fact, that their contracts have been renewed.

"The DOCTOR" by MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

Synopsis

It was two weeks since Dr. Chris Arden completed his interneship and started a practice of his own. His first mistake was to rent an office and room from the shiftless Walters family, but he had felt sorry for mild, inefficient Henry Walters and his drab, listless wife, Lily. They obviously needed the money. Lying in bed this Sunday morning, his sympathy grows when he hears the sharp voice of Katie, their daughter, in the next room. When Chris arises, Henry apologetically asks him to use the back stairs to the bathroom instead of going through the room of Henry's ne'er-do-well son, Dick, as the latter is sleeping and has the door locked.

Chapter 2

"All right, Mr. Walters. "I'll use the back stairs," he called, and with something very close to compassion listened to that gentleman's apologetic retreat.

Then he got out of bed, put on his old dressing gown, gathered up his towel—he already knew better than to leave it in the bathroom—and with a cautious glance at Katie's closed door went down the front stairs and through the dining room to where a narrow flight of steps led up to the bathroom. Quietly as he had moved, however, Mrs. Walters in the kitchen had heard him, and now she confronted him with a worried frown. She was a small woman with untidy, faded, blonde hair and an air of having known better days. Now she looked frightened, as though this new security for her and hers was threatened.

"I'm terribly sorry, Doctor. I've tried to get Dick out, but—well, I guess you know how it is."

"Don't you worry about it," he told her cheerfully. "A little exercise in the morning is good for me. Later on, when the waiting line of patients extends out into the hall, it might be awkward! But not yet."

She was very near to tears, he saw, and he got himself away and up the steps in a hurry. After all, it was not entirely her fault that her children were what they were. Nor, he considered, as he ruefully surveyed the bathroom when he reached it, was it her fault that the tub had not been cleaned by its last user the night before. That would have been Katie, he knew. The odor of cheap scented soap still filled the air, and her towel lay in a damp heap on the floor.

He cleaned the tub carefully, his mind still on the Walters family and his own situation. The Walters, he realized, had been an error, but what was a man to do? Medicine as a profession made no allowances for poverty. It exacted years of preparation and study, it cared for him during his interneship in some hospital or other, and then it shot him out into the world to sink or swim. It gave him ethics and even ideals, but it made it mighty hard to live up to them, or even to live at all. And now he had the Walters and the Walters had been a mistake.

He bathed and shaved carefully and with deliberation. Once somebody tried the door, and he grinned into the mirror. That also would be Katie, he thought. Well, let her wait. He had had plenty of Katie, and he was likely to have more; for already he knew that without his help the Walters family had reached the end of the road.

His mind harked back to a sulky girl in a ward bed after an operation for appendicitis, and Henry Walters beside it, shabby, but with the voice and manner of better times.

"I hear you're leaving the hospital, doctor. Is that so?"

"Yes. My time's up pretty soon."

"I was going to say that we have two parlors that would make good offices, if you care to look at them. They've been rented, but they're empty just now."

The girl had said nothing. She was very young and rather pretty, with two long braids and a sullen mouth, and Chris had smiled down at her.

"How about it, Katie? Want a doctor in the house?"

"I never want to see a doctor again!"

Nevertheless he had taken the offices. The location was good, and Henry Walters was a salesman, if he was not much of anything else.

"Look at them, doctor! Blaze of sunshine in them both. And the street cars stop right at he door. That's an advantage, too."

"Very good sunshine," said Chris, giving praise where praise was due.

But there was an urgency in Henry Walters' voice which was not far from desperation, and so in the end Chris had taken the rooms.

For the payment of the house rent, light, and heat, he was to have his offices and a furnished bedroom, and the service for all three.

"And if you'd like a bit of breakfast," Henry added largely, "well, I don't suppose we'll quarrel over that."

They might well have quarreled over the breakfasts, as Chris soon discovered; but he had taken them for better or for worse, and already Chris knew that he could not turn them back to despair.

Katie's voice came up to him from the kitchen below, high and shrill with resentment.

"Well, I don't care, mother. First he wakes me up, and then he spends an hour in the bathroom. I've got as much right here as he has."

Something of Chris' morning cheerfulness left him. He picked up his towel and razor, put on his dressing gown, and returned by the way he had come. Dick, it seemed, was still sleeping.

When Chris, in the better of his two suits, descended the stairs at 9 o'clock that Sunday, there was nothing to distinguish it from the two mornings which had preceded it or the many which were to follow it. There was perhaps a trifle more of jauntiness, such as belongs to a young medical man on his way down to his office on a bright spring day, and wearing a new necktie of joyous rather than gaudy colors. Nothing to show that it was not just another Sunday morning, with an entire city seemingly unaware that here was a new doctor ready to serve them.

There was still a thrill in that descent, although the bright morning sun of early spring showed the frayed stair and hall carpets, and the battered hall table with a crooked mirror over it. His realm lay beyond, and with a firm and professional step he entered his waiting room.

It had a certain dignity, he considered, with its line of chairs around the walls and its center table covered with new magazines. It was empty, however, and his keen eyes saw that it had not been cleaned that morning, or indeed as usual. There was a slight film of dust on the table, and so he took out his handkerchief and carefully wiped it off.

It was no surprise therefore to go through the double connecting doors and find his consulting room in the same condition.

"Drat the woman!" he muttered, and after weighing the disadvantages of calling in Lily or Katie and watching them shift the dust from one object to another, got out his handkerchief again and carefully set to work.
